Sec. 3. "That immediately after the quarter sessions at which such statement shall have been first laid before the justices of the peace, the clerk of the peace shall cause to be published a copy of such statement in three successive numbers of one or more weekly newspapers usually published or circulated within the same county, riding, or division, and in which the advertisements of county business are usually inserted; and at the foot of such copy shall also cause notice to be given that such statement has been laid before such justices in pursuance of the directions of this act, and that the same will be taken into consideration by the court at the then next ensuing quarter sessions."

Sec. 4. "That when and so often as the justices of the peace of any such county, riding, or division, having a separate commission of the peace, shall adopt wholly or in part any such statement so laid before them, and shall determine to change any parish, tithing, township, or place, from one division to another, or to constitute any new division, within which special sessions shall thenceforward be holden, the said justices of the peace shall thereupon make an order for such alteration, or for the constituting and defining such new division, and in such last-mentioned order shall particularly enumerate the several parishes, tithings, townships, and places to be comprised within such new division, and shall also specify the division or divisions within which respectively any parishes, tithings, townships, and places, disannexed by such order from any former division, and not forming part of such new division, shall thenceforward be taken to be, and also shall affix to such new division the name of some principal and convenient parish, township, or place within the same, and also shall, in either of such orders, as the case may be, particu-

Sect. 5. "That nothing in this act shall be taken to authorize, and that it shall not be lawful for any justices in any court of quarter sessions to make any order constituting such new division, unless upon due proof before them made in open court upon oath, that for two years next before the making of such proof there have been, and at the time of making the same there are, at the least, five justices of the peace residing in or usually acting within the boundary line proposed to be the limits of any such new division."

Sect. 6. "That from and after the day so specified in such order, for the term of twenty-one years, and until further order of sessions after the expiration of that time, and subject to no alteration or revision during such term, except as hereinafter provided, all matters and things which by law are now or hereafter may be required to be, or which now are, usually transacted or determined within the division within which the same shall have arisen, or the parties therein concerned inhabit or exercise their trade or calling, and by or before one, two, or more justices of the peace dwelling or usually acting within the same, shall be transacted and determined, so far as the same matters and things arise within or concern the inhabitants of such new or altered division, or any of them, or the persons exercising their trade or calling therein, within the boundaries of such new or altered division; and such new or altered division shall thenceforward be, and be reputed and taken to be, for all purposes, and in the construction of all statutes now in force or hereafter to be made, and containing no special provision to the contrary, a lawful division for the holding of special sessions; and all bailiffs, constables, tithingmen, surveyors, overseers of the poor, and other officers, publicans, keepers of taverns, coffee-houses, and victualling-houses, and other persons, shall and they are hereby thenceforward required to give their attendance to and upon such justices of the peace at any time assembled in such special sessions, within the same division, as fully and effectually as by law they had been bound to do within any division reputed or taken before the passing of this act to be a lawful and accustomed division of justices for the purposes aforesaid."

Sect. 7. "That, at the quarter sessions next after the laying of any such statement before the justices in such sessions assembled, it shall and may be lawful for such justices, if they shall deem it expedient and proper, not to proceed to the single consideration of such statement, but, instead thereof, to cause to be made an inquiry and examination into the boundary lines, extent, and other local circumstances, of all the existing and accustomed divisions for the holding of special sessions within the commission of such justices; and at such or any succeeding quarter sessions, to which the conclusion of such inquiry and examination may, from time to time, be adjourned, by order of sessions, to regulate, alter, new-model, and subdivide, all or any of such divisions, in such manner as shall appear to them proper and convenient, particularly specifying in such order the names of all such divisions, whether newly constituted, altered, or unaltered, the several parishes, tithings, townships, and places, to be comprised in each, and affixing or continuing to each the name of some principal and convenient parish, township, or place within the same."

Sect. 8. Order to be enrolled as soon as petitions against the same have been determined, and shall not be subject to alteration for ten years.

Sect. 11. "That immediately after the enrolment of such order, the clerk of the peace shall and he is hereby required to cause to be published a copy of the same in three successive numbers of one or more such weekly newspapers as aforesaid, and shall also transmit one copy thereof to each justice of the peace dwelling within or usually acting within and for such county, riding, or division, having such separate commission of the peace."

or taken to extend to the county of Middlesex in England, or to Scotland or Ireland."

II. The Mode of Convening, &c., and who must attend at Sessions.

By whom convened.

By whom Convened—A general session may be convened by any two justices within the jurisdiction, one being of the quorum, or by the custos rotulorum, and any one justice, but not by the custos rotulorum alone, or by one justice alone. Lamb. 375.

How convened.

How Convened—The mode of convening such session is usually by precept, directed under their teste to the sheriff, for the summons of the sessions, thereby commanding him to return a grand jury before them, or their fellow-justices, at a certain day and place, and to give notice to all stewards, constables, and bailiffs of liberties, to be present, and do their duties at such day and place, and to proclaim, in proper places, throughout his bailiwick, that such sessions will be holden at such day and place, and to attend there himself to do his duty. 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 42.

Such precept shall bear teste, or be dated, fifteen days before the return, and ought forthwith to be delivered to the sheriff, to the end he may have sufficient time to proclaim the sessions, to summon and return the several juries, and to warn all officers and others that have business there, to attend. Nels. Introduct. 35.

And it is said that such a precept, by any two justices, cannot be superseded by any of their fellows, but only by writ out of chancery. 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 43.

But it is not sufficient that the precept run under the name of the custos rotulorum alone; for he hath no more authority in this behalf than any one of his fellow-justices; and the words of the commission are, that the sheriff shall cause a jury to appear at such days and places as the said justices, or such two or more of them, as aforesaid, shall appoint. Lamb. 382, supra.

Effect of holding under irregular precept.

Without such precept to the sheriff, no one is bound to attend a general session; but if the session be holden after an irregular precept, and the parties necessary to the despatch of business attend, and the business be regularly transacted, the proceedings will be valid. Lamb. 375; Ld. Raym. 1238; ante, 449.

Superseding of a precept.

A precept for a general session, issued by two justices, cannot be superseded by other justices, but only by a supersedeas issued out of chancery. Lamb. 378, l. 4, c. 2.

Sessions at two places.

Mr. Lambard puts a case from Mr. Marrow, That if two or more justices appoint the sessions to be holden in one town, and so many more appoint a sessions in another town the same day, and holds they may be so held, and that the presentments in both are good; but that appearance at one is a discharge of service at the other. But it may be well questioned whether they are not both void; for they make two courts of that which ought to be entire and but one; for it doth not appear that the justices are required or enabled to hold more than one sessions at a time, and so, their authority being equal, and seeing no preference can be made by the priority of time, or nature of the service, they may be taken to be both void. However, the justices, by whose forwardness such division happens, or on whom such miscarriage is chargeable, are punishable for the same by information and fine, or being put out of the commission, as the case shall require. Dalt. c. 185, p. 457.

Proceedings of justices should be decorous.

Indeed, it is of infinite importance that the proceedings of magistrates should not only be substantially good, but also that they should be decorous. Wherefore, where two sets of magistrates have concurrent jurisdictions, and one appoints a meeting to grant ale licenses, their jurisdiction attaches so as to exclude the others appointing a subsequent meeting; but they may all meet together on the first day. But if, after such appointment, the other set of magistrates meet on a subsequent day, and grant other licenses, their proceeding is illegal, and the subject of an indictment. R. v. T. Sainsbury, Esq., and another, 4 T. R. 451; see Vol. I. p. 484.

Who must Attend at Sessions—In this place it will not be necessary to do more than mention the names of the persons who constitute these sessions of the peace; information as to their appointment, offices, duty, liability, &c. may be found, under their respective titles, in this work.

MODE OF CON-
VENING, &c.

Who must attend

They are as follows:—

1. The Justices of the Peace: these, without doubt, are compellable to appear at the sessions; for, without their appearance, the sessions cannot be holden. Dalt. c. 185, p. 457.

Justices.

But a justice ought not to join in an order at sessions wherein himself is concerned, nor ought his name to be in the caption. An order was quashed for that reason. 2 Salk. 607.

Justices being interested.

2. The Custos Rotulorum, who hath custody of the rolls of sessions, ought (by the commission) to be there by himself, or by his deputy, who is the clerk of the peace. Dalt. c. 185, p. 458.

lorum.

3. The Sheriff, also, by virtue of the commission, by himself or his deputy; to receive the fines, or return jurors, to execute process, and what else to his office doth appertain. Id.

4. All Coroners. Id.

5. The Constables of Hundreds, (that is, high constables,) and all other officers to whom any warrant hath been directed, in order to make return thereof. Id.

8. The Keeper of the House of Correction, to give in a calendar and account of persons in his custody. Id.

house of correction.

9. All persons returned by the sheriff, by virtue of the aforesaid precept. And the jurors, not appearing according to their summons, are punishable by loss of issues, which usually make part of the estreats of sessions. Id.

Persons returned by the sheriff.

10. All persons returned by Recognizance to answer, or to prosecute and give evidence. Dalt. c. 185, p. 458.

zance.

Suitors of the Court, is a term which may be supposed to imply only those who have some voluntary suit to prosecute; but it may be used as descriptive of all persons who have any duty to perform, or any necessary business to execute, voluntary or official, before the court.

Suitors of the court.

Witnesses—We have already seen, that when a charge is made before a magistrate, he may bind over the party making the charge to prosecute and give evidence, and also all who can give material evidence; and, on their obstinate refusal, may commit them. And as to the proper course to be pursued in different cases of this nature, see title Examination, Vol. II.

Witnesses.

It may be now necessary to notice the process by which witnesses are compelled to attend.

When any offender is brought before a justice by warrant, or otherwise, for felony, or breach of the peace, beside the informant, and any witnesses who may happen to be voluntarily present (and whom, it has already been seen, it is the duty of the examining justice to bind by recognizance to appear at the session), there may be others known to him, whose testimony may be necessary, or at least useful, on the occasion. These the justice may issue his warrant to bring before him, to be examined touching the matter in question; (a) but it is more common, in the first instance, especially if they be respectable persons, to make it only a summons.

If the evidence be found by the justice on examination to be material, he must then be bound by recognizance, like the rest, to attend at the session of the peace, and give it to the court and juries there, in like form, varied only according to the circumstances of the offence; and if he refuse to enter into such recognizance, the justice may commit him to gaol; 2 Hale, 282; 1 Hale, 586; Bennet et Usor v. Watson, 3 M. & S. 1.; wherein, if he obstinately continue till the session, he may be brought up to the court by writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum. 31 Car. II. c. 2; 44 Geo. III. c. 102. See Habeas Corpus, Vol. II.

Lord Preston, being committed by the court of quarter session for contempt, in refusing to be sworn to give evidence to the grand jury, on an indictment of high treason, he was brought, by habeas corpus, into the Court of King's Bench; and Holt, C. J., said, it was a great contempt, and that, had he been there, he would have fined him, and committed him till he paid the fine; but being otherwise, he was bailed. Salk. 278.

Subpoena.

The process, to bring before the grand jury or court such witnesses as have not been bound by recognizance to appear, whether on the part of the prosecution, or for the defendant, is by subpoena; which, whatever might have been the law in former times, 2 Haw. c. 46, is now to be obtained in all cases whatsoever; 2 Wil. III. c. 3; 1 Anne, c. 9; 4 Bla. Com. 359; 2 Haw. c. 46; for the assizes, from the Crown Office; for the sessions, from the clerk of the peace, or from the Crown Office. And the service of a subpoena, issued out of any court of competent jurisdiction, is declared to be equally good with service in the particular county where the party is required to attend; 45 Geo. III. c. 92. And disobedience to it is punishable by the Court of King's Bench. Talf. Dick. Sess. 77.

ficandum.

The writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum, for a witness in prison, can only be obtained by an affidavit made by the party applying, stating the confinement of the person whose evidence is wanted; that he is a material witness; that the trial cannot safely be proceeded in without his presence; and that it is about to take place at a certain time and place, with such other circumstances (if required) as may show the necessity for the application. It may be granted by any one of the judges of the superior courts in England and Ireland (44 Geo. III. c. 102). It is to be served on the person in whose custody the party is detained. See ante, Evidence, Vol. II. p. 82, 83, 84.

sutors, &c.

Protection of Court to Sutors, &c.—Before concluding this division, it may be necessary to inquire how far the protection of the court is extended to sutors of every description; and what privileges or immunities it has been thought expedient to bestow, as necessary to the advancement and interests of public justice.

Freedom of ac-
sions. (a)

All persons may freely attend at the sessions for the advancement of public justice, and for the service of the king. And to this end they are (as it were) invited thither by a certain freedom of access, and by protection from common arrest: a thing that is incident to each court of record, and without which justice would be greatly hindered. So that, if a man come voluntarily to the sessions, either to prefer a bill of indictment, or to give information against another, or to tender fine upon an indictment touching himself; or do come compelled to make appearance for saving his recognizance, and be arrested by the sheriff, upon common and original process, in his coming thither, or during his tarrying there, it seemeth (Mr. Lambard says) that (upon examination of the matter under his oath) he shall be discharged thereof by the privilege of this court, even as it is used in the higher courts at Westminster. Lamb. 402.

But Mr. Hawkins puts it more doubtfully, saying, "it is questioned whether the sessions, as also all courts of record, may not discharge any person arrested during his journeying to or from such courts, or necessary attendance there, by process from any other court: however, it seems to be agreed that any such court may discharge a person who shall be so arrested in the face of it." 2 Haw. c. 1, s. 19.

But now no doubt can be entertained on the subject; and this privilege is so incident to the duty of attendance on judicial proceedings, that it has been construed to extend to the case of a party to a cause attending an arbitrator, to be examined under an order of nisi prius made a rule of court. Spence v. Stuart, Bart., 3 East, 89.

(a) As to the right of a third person to be present, to assist as the adviser of the party, see Justices, Vol. III. p. 471.

On general principles, this privilege from arrest, cundo, morando, et redeundo, applies to the case of every person in necessary attendance on a court of justice; and, for this purpose, the sitting of commissioners of bankrupt, or of an arbitrator, is so deemed. 8 T. R. 534.

MODE OF PROCEEDING AT, IN GENERAL.

And it seemeth to have been agreed in the argument upon Col. Pitt's case, 2 Stra. 987 (which was an arrest in his return from Parliament), that not only in the high court of Parliament, but also in the inferior courts, the parties to the suit, and also the witnesses, are protected in going, continuing, and returning. This returning hath never been very nicely scanned, so as to require a man to go the direct road. Neither is the law so strict in point of time as to require a person to set out immediately after the trial is over; and for that was cited the case of Hatch v. Blisset, T. 13 Anne. She had a trial at Winchester assizes, which was over on Friday at four in the afternoon; she stayed there till after dinner on Saturday; and in the evening at seven was arrested going home to Portsmouth, which is twenty miles: and the court held, that she ought to be discharged, her protection not being expired, and a little deviation of loitering would not alter it.

Privilege from arrest, &c.

But where a man is arrested by process out of the courts at Westminster, it doth not seem that the justices of the peace (unless the arrest be made in the sessions) have power to discharge him; but, on application to the court from which the process issued, such court probably may discharge him, and punish the person who made the arrest.

Attorneys—By the 22 Geo. II. c. 46, s. 12, no person shall act as a solicitor, attorney, or agent, or sue out any process at any general or quarter sessions, either with respect to matters of a criminal or a civil nature, unless he be admitted and enrolled according to law on pain of 50*l.* to him who shall sue in twelve months, with treble costs; and if any attorney shall permit any person to make use of his name in the said court, he shall in like manner forfeit 50*l.*

Who shall act in the sessions as solicitor.

Sect. 14. And no clerk of the peace, under-sheriff, or their deputies, shall act as solicitor, attorney, or agent, or sue out any process at such sessions, on the like pain of 50*l.*

As to the right of a counsel or attorney to be present as the legal adviser of the party, see Justices, Vol. III. p. 471.

III. The Mode of Proceeding at Sessions.

And herein—1. Of the Mode of Proceeding in General—2. The Trial of Offences—3. The Trial of Traverses—and, 4. The Hearing of Appeals.

(1.) In General.

It is necessary that the court should assemble before twelve at noon on the day for which it is summoned; for, by the 25 Car. II. c. 2, s. 2, the qualification oaths, &c., must be taken between the hours of nine and twelve in the forenoon.

Hour.

A bailiff then usually proclaims the session, in the following terms:

O yez, O yez, O yez,—The king's justices do strictly charge and command all manner of persons to keep silence, whilst the king's commission of the peace for this county is openly read, upon pain of imprisonment.

Proclamation.

The commission, the king's proclamation against vice, &c., and the several statutes directed to be read at the sessions, ought now to be read by the clerks of the peace and the town clerks respectively. These were principally the following:—5 Eliz. c. 1, against popery (a); 30 Car. II. c. 3, as to burying in woollen (a); 11 & 12 Wil. III. c. 15, (a) as to ale measures; 1 Geo. I. c. 5, Statutes to be read.

(a) These statutes are most of them now repealed: see the respective titles of Popery, ante, p. 147; Weights and Measures, post; Riots, ante, p. 277;

Malicious Injuries to Property, Vol. III.; Jurors, Vol. III.; Bribery, Vol. I.

MODE OF PRO-CEEDING AT,
IN GENERAL.

as to riots; and the black act, 9 Geo. I. c. 22, (a) which have been required to be given in charge at every quarter session; and the 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24; 7 & 8 Wil. III. c. 32; 3 & 4 Anne, c. 18; and 3 Geo. II. c. 25, (a) concerning jurors, which are to be read in Midsummer sessions yearly; and 2 Geo. II. c. 24, (a) for preventing bribery and corruption in the election of members of Parliament, which is to be read at every Easter session.

Discontinued.

It will not be wondered at, that, in the present day, when the time allowed to justices for the performance of their duties has become so much more valuable from the additional pressure of business, the practice of reading these statutes is discontinued. Some of them, besides, are now repealed, some have become obsolete, and the notoriety of the others renders such a course unnecessary.

Return of precept.

The sheriff is then called on to return the several precepts directed to him, returnable on that day, that proceedings may be commenced thereon.

Oaths to be taken.

The persons who attend to take the several oaths are next called, and such oaths are administered to them by the clerk of the peace.

We have already noticed the act 25 Car. II. c. 2, and 1 Geo. I. c. 13, which direct persons to take the oaths between the hours of nine and twelve in the forenoon; and not otherwise. But it has been held a sufficient compliance with the statute, if the ceremony of administering the oaths of qualification for offices be commenced previous to the last of the hours of limitation appointed by the statute, and continued till all are sworn. Dick. Sess.

Calling constables, &c.
Defaulters.

The oaths of qualification and indemnity having been administered, it is then usual for the clerk of the peace to call over the constables of hundreds, and of parishes, &c., which is commonly done (with respect to the defaulters on the first call) a second, and even a third time. On their not answering to the name of their respective parishes for which they serve, the court will set a fine on the defaulters.

Grand jury called.

The names of those returned to serve on the grand jury are now called over by the clerk of the peace (or in cities and towns corporate by the town-clerk). For matters relating to the qualification, &c., of those jurors, see title Juror, Vol. III. p. 404, &c. The number called and sworn should not be less than thirteen, nor more than twenty-three; and it is not unusual at sessions, after sixteen or seventeen names have been called, and the parties have appeared, to consider the inquest as complete, and to dismiss the rest who have attended on their summons.

Chairman's charge.

The ceremony of administering the oaths to the grand jurors being concluded, the chairman of the session ought to deliver his charge, proclamation having been made to keep silence while the charge is given. (b)

(a) See note (a), in preceding page.

(b) "It is much to be lamented," says Mr. Dickenson, in his work on Sessions, "that this part of the chairman's duty is very frequently altogether omitted, and sometimes performed in a very cursory, and even slovenly, manner. The calendar generally presents sufficient occasion for observations on the general state of morals in the particular district; on the activity of justices, chief constables, and all officers of the peace; and on other subjects immediately connected with the duties of the day: and there can be few instances of a session occurring in which there is not some indictment or other to come before the jurors, on which some information may not be, at least, convenient and acceptable, if not absolutely necessary. Indictments for assault, which frequently originate in a spirit of party, malice, or revenge, and are usually one item in the business of a quarter session, present a fruitful source of observation; indictment of roads, another; and some modern statutes (ex. gr. those which respect the coin, embezzlement by servants, friendly societies, saving-banks, seditious meetings, and the regulation of the poor of all descriptions) comprehend so many more points of discrimination, as it is no disparagement of the discernment of such persons as usually compose the grand juries at quarter sessions, to say, must be much above their comprehension, without some explanatory remarks from the chairman, by way of previous charge."

These observations on the necessity for a charge, at all events, naturally lead to some consideration of the suf-

The charge being concluded, the course is to call the recognizances, especially such as are to prosecute and give evidence, that so bills, which have not been previously prepared, may be drawn by the clerk of the peace.

If jurisdiction be given to the sessions to hear and determine, and the statute doth not say by information, this shall be by indictment, and not upon information. Dalt. c. 191, p. 469.

Where a power is given to a jurisdiction which does not ordinarily entertain actions, bills, or complaints, in general terms, to inquire of, hear, and determine the offence, it must be understood to mean by the common-law mode of proceeding, viz. by indictment or presentment. Shipman, q. t. v. Herbert, 4 T. R. 109.

Though, in certain and particular cases, an action may be brought at the assizes or the sessions, by the 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 14, 5 Eliz. c. 4, s. 39, and 21 Jac. I. c. 18, s. 12, an action, bill, or plaint, cannot, by the common law, be brought at the assizes or the sessions. 4 T. R. 115.

The 1 Jac. I. c. 22, gives certain penalties to be recovered (s. 46) by action of debt or information in the courts at Westminster; and the 50th section gives jurisdiction to the justices of assize of gaol delivery and of the peace, to inquire of the premises, and to hear or determine the same; under the latter clause, the inferior courts can only proceed by indictment or presentment; and the informer may bring an action of debt in the superior courts at Westminster, notwithstanding the 21 Jac. I. c. 4. Id.

The true meaning of the 21 Jac. I. c. 4, is this: wherever, by any act then in force, the informer might have sued by action, bill, plaint, suit, or information, in the inferior courts, as well as in the courts at Westminster, he is confined to sue in the former. But as this stat. gives no new jurisdiction to the inferior courts, the party may still sue in the courts at Westminster, for all those penalties which could not, before the passing of that statute, have been recovered in the inferior ones. Ib. 117.

The bills, as they are got ready—that is to say, drawn out fairly and engrossed on parchment (either by the prosecutor's professional adviser, or by the clerk of the peace), with the names of the witnesses written on the backs of them respectively, are delivered to the grand jury, and the parties bound to give evidence upon them, being sworn in court, are sent to the grand jury to give their evidence. It is presumed, of course, that they are all in attendance for these purposes, either by recognizance or under subpoena; to which there can regularly be but one exception, and that arising out of a privilege given by a statute to prosecutors of offences committed within the county of a city, or town corporate, to prefer their indictments before the grand jury of the county adjoining, at the assizes for the same, on condition of entering into recognizance to pay the extra costs incurred by such proceeding, if the court shall so direct. In the case of this privilege being taken advantage of, it may be necessary to notice here, that the prosecutor, ten days scency of the chairman to discharge this duty, and therefore to introduce a decided reprobation of a measure lately introduced into some counties, of the respective justices taking the chair by rotation. Nothing can be more subversive of regularity, consistency in practice, expedition in business, information to the jurors, authority over the advocates, or satisfaction to the country, than such a practice. To execute the various duties of chairman of a quarter session, as they ought to be executed, requires the personal qualifications of some legal knowledge, reasonable experience, an acquaintance with forms and technical proceedings, and a portion of that decision and authority, which can only be acquired by a confidence in the possession of these qualities, to at least a certain degree. Unless the chairman possess these requisites to some extent, the jury can receive no information, inexperienced advocates will run riot, and the county will not feel that respect for the court, which it is both desirable and useful that it should do. It leads also to another consequence, which ought neither to be agreeable to himself or the bench, or the suitors of the session, viz. that the clerk of the peace, being the only permanent and stationary organ of the court, instead of its minister, becomes its master.

MODE OF PROCEEDING AT, IN GENERAL.

before the session, must give to the defendant, as well as to the witnesses, notices in writing to that effect. Dick. 3, Sess. p. 90.

Justices of quarter sessions or general sessions of the peace, may appoint two or more justices (one to be of the quorum), to form a court to sit apart from them.

The dispatch of business in the sessions is now greatly assisted by the enactment of the 59 Geo. III. c. 28, "An Act to empower Magistrates to divide the Court of Quarter Sessions." That act directs, "that whenever and as often as any court of quarter session or general session of the peace shall be assembled for the dispatch of business thereunto belonging, the justices then present may, on the first day of their being so assembled, take into their consideration the state of the business likely to be brought before them at such quarter session or general session; and if it shall appear to them that such business, if heard and determined by the whole court, is likely to occupy more than three days, including the day of their being so assembled, it shall and may be lawful for the said justices to appoint two or more justices, one of whom shall be of the quorum, to sit apart from themselves in some place in or near the court, there to hear and determine such business as shall be referred to them, whilst others of the justices are at the same time proceeding in the dispatch of the other business of the same court; and that the proceedings so had by and before such two or more justices so sitting apart shall be as good and effectual in the law to all intents and purposes as if the same were had before the court assembled and sitting as usual in its ordinary place of sitting, and shall be enrolled and recorded accordingly."

Regulations made for the apportionment of business need not be renewed at each succeeding session.

Sec. 2. "That when two or more justices shall have sat apart in manner before directed by this act, and orders, rules, and regulations, shall have been made for the apportionment of business, such orders, rules, and regulations, shall remain and continue in force as long as shall be thought expedient, without the necessity of renewing such orders, rules, and regulations at each succeeding session, to the intent that the same may become public and better known to all professional and other persons engaged in or in any manner interested in the business of such quarter session."

Clerk of the peace to appoint a person to record the proceedings of such separate court.

Sec. 3. "That the clerk of the peace or his deputy (wherever two or more justices shall sit apart at any quarter session) shall be authorized and required to appoint a fit and sufficient person to record the proceedings so had before the justices sitting apart; and such proceedings shall be delivered over to the clerk of the peace or his deputy, and shall be equally deemed to be a part of the records of such session, as if the same proceedings had been recorded by the clerk of the peace himself; and it shall be lawful for the justices assembled at the quarter session to make an order upon the treasurer of the county to pay to the clerk of the peace such sum or sums of money as they shall deem a fit and reasonable remuneration to the clerk of the peace for such purpose as aforesaid; and it shall be lawful for such justices to appoint an additional cryer, and to grant him such remuneration for his care and pains as they shall deem reasonable, which shall in like manner be paid by the treasurer of the county."

Quarter sessions may order county treasurer to remunerate clerk of the peace.

Remarks on the power of dividing.

This power of dividing, it may be right here to observe, may, according to the second section of the act, either be exercised at each particular session, as the necessity for it shall arise, or it may be provided for prospectively for any number of sessions that may be thought convenient; and, for the effectual execution of the purposes designed by it, the sessions are authorized to call upon the clerk of the peace to appoint a deputy, and for themselves to appoint an additional cryer for such engrafted or emanant court, and to remunerate them respectively for their labours by order on the county treasurer.

In noticing this act, Mr. Dickenson has observed, that, to whatever extent the authority confined by this statute be exercised, when the grand jury have received their instructions from the chairman, and have retired to their room, seems the proper moment for the division of the court to take place. The most natural distribution of the various subjects over which a quarter sessions of the peace now has jurisdiction, seems to be, that one division of the court should take that portion which requires the intervention of a jury, with the motions arising out of, or relating to, the commencement, the postponement, and the result of prosecution, whatever it may be; while the other is occupied with the exercise of the summary jurisdiction given to justices by statute, whether original, or by appeal from that of individual magistrates. Dick. Sess. p. 102.

TRIALS FOR OFFENCES.

(2.) In Trials for Offences.

A great part of the business of session consists of the arraignment and trial of prisoners: it will be proper in this place, therefore, to take some notice of the manner of proceeding thereupon; though in the title Arraignment, Vol. I. some information, touching these matters, has been already given.

It is said generally, that all offences shall be prosecuted at the sessions by presentment, information, or indictment. Com. Dig. Justice, (D. 9.) But if jurisdiction be given to the sessions to hear and determine, and it be not expressly said "by information," the offence must be prosecuted by indictment only. 4 T. R. 109. And see further, ante, 459.

The bills of indictment having been delivered into court by the grand jury, the gaoler is called to set his prisoners to the bar, and the crier being called to make a bar, that is, to dispose of the company, that a way may be made open from the court to the prisoners, and that the court, jury, and prisoners may see each other, one of the prisoners is called to:—"A. B., hold up your hand."

Yet it is not necessary that he hold up his hand at the bar, or be commanded so to do; for this is only a ceremony, for making known the person of the prisoner to the court, and if he answer that he be the same person, it is all one. 2 Haw. c. 28, s. 2.

The indictment is now read, and, in cases of felony, this is a proceeding of the utmost consequence, because the prisoner, not being, as it seems, entitled to a copy (a), has no other means of knowing the precise charge to which he is to answer. Even at the time when our judicial proceedings were written in Latin, the 37 Edw. III. c. 15, required that this important document should be done in English. The charge should be laid in the second person, and be read slowly and distinctly—as thus: "You, A. B., stand indicted, by the name of A. B., late of, &c., in the county of, &c., for that you, on, &c.," reading the whole indictment in the same manner. If it be demanded by the prisoner, the indictment must be read so slowly as to enable his solicitor to take a copy as the officer proceeds—for the law entitles him to this privilege.

The reading of the indictment being concluded, the officer addresses the prisoners, "How say you, A. B., are you guilty of the felony whereof you stand indicted, or not guilty?" If the prisoner pleads guilty, the court may immediately record the plea, and either proceed immediately to give judgment, or examine witnesses as to the circumstances of the offence, for the guidance of their own discretion in determining on the sentence. But it is usual for the officer to explain to the prisoner the consequence of his plea, and to ask him again whether he persists in it; and there is a very prevalent practice among judges of assize of doing far more than this—of entreating the prisoner to withdraw his plea, admonishing him of his right to a trial, and manifesting the greatest reluctance to receive his open confession of guilt. How far this practice at sessions shall be adopted, must be left to the good sense of the chairman. Dick. Sess. by Talfourd, p. 340.

If the prisoner has any matter to plead, either in abatement or bar of the indictment, as misnomer, autrefois acquit, autrefois convict, a pardon, &c., he shall plead it upon arraignment, without answering to the felony. 2 Hale, 219.

For further information regarding the above pleas, see titles Abatement, Vol. I., Misnomer, Vol. III., Autrefois Acquit, Vol. I., Autrefois Convict, Vol. I., &c. And as to standing mute, see title Mute, Vol. III., Plea, ante, p. 105.

TRIALS FOR OFFENCES.

Plea—not guilty.

If the prisoners plead not guilty, it was customary, before the enactment of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 1, for the officer to ask him, "How will you be tried?" and to direct him to make answer, "By God and my country;" to which the officer then rejoined, "God send you a good deliverance." These forms are, however, now abolished by the statute alluded to, which directs, that when a prisoner shall plead not guilty, he shall by such plea, without any further form, be deemed to have put himself on the country for trial, and the court shall, in the usual manner, order a jury for the trial of such person accordingly. The plea is, however, still recorded by the officer, who writes the words ponit se on the parchment record of the proceedings of the sessions.

The question, "How will you be tried," may be well imagined to have been in former times of some importance, when it is remembered that trials by battle and ordeal were then in use, as well as by the country or a jury.

Arraignment.
Humanity to-
soner.

Mr. Hawkins observes, that every person at the time of his arraignment ought to be used with all the humanity and gentleness which is consistent with the nature of the thing, and under no other terror or uneasiness than what proceeds from a sense of his guilt, and the misfortune of his present circumstances, and therefore ought not to be brought to the bar in a contumelious manner, as with his hands tied together, or any other mark of ignominy and reproach; nor even with fetters on his feet, unless there be some danger of a rescous or escape. 2 Haw. c. 28, s. 1.

And the court ought to exhort him to answer without fear, and to acquaint him that he shall have justice done to him. 2 Inst. 316.

Prisoner not to have counsel in treason or felony.

On indictments of treason or felony, the prisoner shall not have counsel allowed to him, unless a point of law arise, proper to be debated; nor a copy (a) of the indictment. 2 Haw. c. 39, s. 2, 13.

But, in offences under felony, a defendant may be heard by his counsel. Wood's Inst. B. 4, c. 5.

Jury called.

When a sufficient number of prisoners are arraigned, the petty jury are called on their panel by the clerk of the peace, in this manner: "You good men that are returned and impanelled to try the issue joined between our sovereign lord the king and the prisoners at the bar, answer to your names, and save your fines;" which done, and a full jury appearing, the clerk of the peace calls the prisoners to the bar, and informs them of their right to challenge, in these terms:—"These good men, whose names you hear called, and who appear, are those who are to pass between our sovereign lord the king and you, upon your respective trials. If, therefore, you or either of you would challenge them, or any of them, you must challenge them as they come to the book to be sworn, before they are sworn, and you shall be heard."

lenge.

This, then, is the proper time for the prisoner or for the prosecutor to make challenges; for no challenge is good until a full jury appear. R. v. Edmonds, 4 B. & A. 471; and see, further, Jurors, Vol. III. p. 426, &c.

Every prisoner may desire the right of challenge separately; and if he demand his right in legal phrase, "to sever in his challenges," the other prisoners will be desired to withdraw, that he may make his challenges alone.

Praying a tales.

If there be a defect of jurors, a party intending to challenge the array may pray a tales, and then make his challenge. See Vol. III. p. 432.

As to causes of challenge, and other information on this head, see Jurors, Vol. III. p. 426, &c.

Jury sworn.

The challenges being concluded, and the jury full, the clerk of the peace calls the jury to be sworn, every man severally; and this is done, in cases of felony, in the following manner:—

"You shall well and truly try, and true deliverance make, between our sovereign lord the king and the prisoners at the bar, whom you shall have in charge, and a true verdict give according to the evidence. So help you God."

In misdemeanor.

In cases of misdemeanor, the jurors are sworn four at a time, in the following terms:—

(a) As to this, see the case of Broune v. Cumming, 10 B. & C. 70; and Indictment, Vol. I. p. 357.

"You shall well and truly try the issues joined between our sovereign lord the king and the defendant, and a true verdict give, according to the evidence. So help you God."

The crier then counts the jurors, as the clerk of the peace reads their names, and asks them "if they are all sworn."

After the jury are sworn, in cases of felony, the crier makes proclamation as follows:—

"If any one can inform my lords the king's justices, the king's attorney-general, or the king's serjeant, on this inquest now to be taken, of any felonies or misdemeanors done or committed by the prisoner at the bar, let him come forth, and he shall be heard; for the prisoner now stands at the bar on his delinquency; and they that are bound to prosecute and give evidence, let them come forth, and prosecute and give evidence, or they will forfeit their recognizances."

The form used in cases of misdemeanor is similar to the above, with the omission of the term "felony," and the substitution of the word "defendant," for "prisoner," and the omission of the standing at the bar, &c.

The prosecutor and his witnesses are then called by name, and on appearance, take the places assigned them in court.

Prosecutors and witnesses called.

In cases of misdemeanor, the prosecutor's counsel now at once opens trial; but in felonies, another form yet remains,—it is termed charging the jury.

All the prisoners, except one to be tried, are put from the bar, and the clerk of the peace charges the jury as follows:—

"The prisoner at the bar stands indicted by the name of A. B. [reading the indictment, as upon the arraignment]; upon this indictment he has been arraigned; upon his arraignment, has pleaded not guilty; and for his trial has put himself upon God and his country, which country you are. Your charge, therefore, is to inquire whether he be guilty of the felony whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty, and to hearken to the evidence."

The witnesses, as well for the king as the prisoner, are then sworn thus:—

Witnesses sworn.

"The evidence you shall give to the court and jury sworn, between our sovereign lord the king and the prisoner at the bar, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. So help you God."

The trial then proceeds: if the case be one of misdemeanor, and there be two or more counsel for the prosecution, the substance of the indictment, which the jury have not yet heard, must be stated by the junior; in cases of felony, this is of course superfluous, the indictment having been already twice read in the hearing of the jury; and, although in former times it was observed, it is now, in sessions practice, generally disused. It often occurs at sessions, that the case is of so plain a nature as not to require opening; when this is not the case, however, it is opened by the leading counsel, according to his instructions.

Trial begins.

Opening of case
by counsel.

In treating of this important duty, Mr. Talfourd observes, that it ought to be confined to a simple detail of the facts expected to be proved:—"because the prisoner has no opportunity of laying his case before the jury by his counsel; and even the privilege of stating circumstances, however dryly, in such order and connection as may tend most directly to a particular conclusion is, in itself, no small advantage accorded to the prosecutor, and certainly should be exercised with great forbearance and caution. It is especially right for counsel to refrain from stating any part in the case, the proof of which, from his own brief, may appear doubtful; because he may thus produce an erroneous impression on the minds of uncultivated men, which the mere failure of the evidence may not remove, and on which the prisoner is generally quite unable to comment. For the same reason he should always forbear from stating confessions, which often turn out to be inadmissible; and should very rarely detail conversations, which are peculiarly liable to be misunderstood, and the whole bearing of which may be altered by the omission or transposition of a word. In cases of misdemeanor, the prosecuting counsel is not thus restricted, because here the defendant is allowed to make a real defence by his counsel, and, therefore, here the counsel for the prosecutor may not only state his facts, but reason upon them, and anticipate any line of defence which his opponent may probably adopt ; but, even here, he should refrain from indulging in invective, and from appealing to the prejudices or passions of the jury ; for it is neither in good taste nor in right feeling to struggle for a conviction, as an advocate in a civil cause contends for a verdict."

OFFENCES.

A prosecutor is never allowed personally to address the jury ; he can only be examined on his oath, in the box, like another witness. The cause, though instituted by him, is not considered his cause, but that of the crown : when no counsel, therefore, is engaged for the prosecution, there can be no opening ; and the duty of examining the witnesses devolves on the chairman. In cases of felony, the depositions taken before magistrates are of much importance in assisting him in this duty ; they ought, therefore, in all cases, to be returned by the magistrates before whom they were taken. In cases of misdemeanor, he can merely call on the witnesses upon the back of the indictment, to be sworn, and give their own narrative.

Evidence.

The reader who wishes for information respecting the parts of the charge to be established, the degree and nature of proof necessary, and the admissibility of witnesses, &c. is referred to title Evidence, Vol. II.

Case closed.

On the case for the prosecution being closed, it is the duty of the chairman, in all cases where the prisoner has no counsel, and in cases of felony, though he has counsel, to ask him what he has to say in answer to the charge.

And, of late years, the judges never scruple to allow the prisoner counsel, to instruct him what questions to ask, or even to ask questions for him, with respect to matters of fact. 4 Bla. Com.

Court to be of counsel with him.

And at this day it is the practice never to object to the allowance of counsel, if the prisoner can procure them. If there be none other, the court is to be of counsel with the prisoner, and ought to advise him for his good, and not take advantage too strictly against him. Dalt. c. 185, p. 460.

Upon the trial of issues, which do not turn upon the question of guilty or not guilty, but upon collateral facts, prisoners under a capital charge, whether for treason or felony, always were entitled to the full assistance of counsel.
Fost. 232, 242.

Office, &c. of counsel for prisoner.

On this subject, of the office of counsel for a prisoner, and of the objections he may address to the court on the prosecutor's case, we shall extract from Mr. Talfourd's work on Sessions :—"In cases of felony, the prisoner's counsel has never a right to address the jury on the merits of the case ; but he may now submit to the bench any point of law arising on the evidence, or any absolute deficiency of proof as to a part of the charge, which may entitle his client to an acquittal. Thus, he may submit that there is no evidence of any part of the offence occurring within the county where the trial is had ; that there is a substantial variance between some material allegation and the proof offered to support it ; that the offence, supposing the evidence to be credible, does not amount in law to that which is charged, as that an appropriation charged as a larceny is a mere breach of trust, or an embezzlement ; for these are matters which show that the prisoner ought not to be put on his defence. He may sometimes submit that there is nothing for the jury to consider, as when the charge is not brought home to his client at all ; and if the bench think so, they will direct an acquittal ; but counsel will not be permitted to argue on the slightness of the evidence where there is any applicable to the prisoner, or to discuss questions which are properly for the jury, as questions of knowledge and intention.
Where an objection is taken which the bench do not immediately overrule, the counsel for the prisoner are first heard in its support ; the counsel for the prosecution then give their answer to it seriatim ; and the leading counsel for the prisoner (if he has more than one) replies ; after which the justices deliberate, and the chairman collects their votes, and announces their decision.
Where the objection relates to the absence of some formal proof, which can be immediately supplied, the court always allows such proof to be given, for it will not permit justice to be defeated by a mere accidental omission of counsel.
When the bench has decided that the case for the prosecution has failed in point of law, the chairman ought not to recommend, but to direct the jury to acquit ; and the officer ought immediately to take and record the verdict."

On the case being submitted to the jury, the prisoner, in case of felony, and the defendant, or his leading counsel, in case of misdemeanor, is entitled to address them. The party accused may well be supposed to labour under many disadvantages, on being obliged to defend himself: any statement, therefore, which he may submit, ought to be heard attentively and patiently; and although, as has been observed, it is not made on oath, and not supported by proof, still, if it carries with it the appearance of sincerity, and offers a reasonable explanation of the circumstances which seem to bear against him, it ought to be carefully weighed and candidly estimated by a jury.

IN TRIALS FOR OFFENCES.
Defence.

In cases of misdemeanor, the counsel for the defendant may comment on the case for the prosecution; he may adduce evidence to any extent, and even introduce new facts, provided he can establish them by witnesses. He cannot, however, assume as proved that which is not proved.

In cases of felony, the counsel for the prosecution never replies. In cases of misdemeanor, where witnesses are called (except merely to character), he has a right to reply in every instance, similar to that of a counsel in a civil action. If the witnesses are called merely to give evidence as to character, a usage has long prevailed among counsel in the highest criminal courts of forbearing to reply, which, however it originated, is now firmly established and acted on. But in the case of the King v. Bignold, 4 D. & R. 70, Lord Tenterden revived an important rule, originally promulgated by Lord Kenyon, and by which a reply is allowed to the counsel for the prosecution, if the counsel for the defendant, in his address to the jury, states any fact, or any document which is not already in evidence, although he afterwards declines to prove the fact, or put it in writing. But it would be scarcely fair, as has been remarked, to apply this rule to a statement made by a defendant in person, and unsupported by evidence.

It is now the duty of the chairman, the case on both sides being closed, to sum up the evidence. His address ought to be free from all technical phraseology, the substance of the charge plainly stated, the attention of the jury directed to the precise issue to be tried, and the evidence applied to that issue. In cases of felony, it may be necessary to read over the whole evidence: if requested by the jury, this will of course be done, though, in general, it is better merely to state its substance.

Summing up.

Reading evidence.

If the jury cannot agree on their verdict at the bar, a bailiff must be sworn to keep the jury thus:—

Verdict.

"You shall swear that you shall keep this jury without meat, drink, fire, or candle; you shall suffer none to speak to them, neither shall you speak to them yourself, but only to ask them whether they are agreed: So help you God." Dalt. c. 185, p. 460.

The jury coming back, the prisoner is brought to the bar; the names of the jury are called over, and the verdict taken as before. Dalt. c. 18, p. 460.

The officer then, in case of felony, desires the prisoner to hold up his hand, and addresses the jury—

"Gentlemen, are you agreed on your verdict? do you find the prisoner guilty of this felony whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?"

The foreman then delivers the verdict, which, in cases of felony, can only be received in open court, and in the prisoner's presence, though the court may be adjourned during the deliberation. Co. Lit. 227.

In cases of misdemeanor it may be delivered elsewhere, and is often given in the defendant's absence. 5 Burr. 2667.

When the verdict is delivered, the officer proceeds to ask the same question as to the other prisoners, if there are any, included in the charge; and having received their answers in like manner, severally addresses them—

"Hearken to your verdict as the court recordeth it: you say A. B. is guilty [or, not guilty] of the felony whereof he stands indicted [and so of the others, if more than one]; this is your verdict, and so ye say all."

The verdict is at the same time recorded.

OFFENCES.
Proceedings on verdict of guilty.

The verdict of guilty having been returned, the prisoner, or the defendant, if present in court, is called upon to say why judgment should not be passed upon him. He may here offer something to the court in extenuation of his offence; or he may (says Blackstone, 4 Com. 375) at this period, as well as at his arraignment, offer any exceptions to the indictment, in arrest or stay of judgment: as, for want of sufficient certainty in setting forth either the person, the time, the place, or the offence. To this species of error alone the privilege is confined.

Sentence.

If nothing is offered in extenuation, or something so trifling as not to require further deliberation, sentence is generally passed immediately; proclamation having been made three times by the crier of the court, as follows:

"O ye, O ye, — All manner of persons are commanded to keep silence, whilst judgment is given against the prisoners at the bar, upon pain of imprisonment."

In trials for misdemeanors, this proclamation is not made, and in the less important cases of felony it is often omitted.

The prisoner is then placed at the bar, and sentence pronounced by the chairman. On the subject of this important part of a justice's public duty—in the exercise of which, as has been well remarked, the law has left the most to his discretion, with the fewest means of regulating his judgment—we subjoin a note by Mr. Dickenson, from his work on Sessions:—

"Where statutes have conferred upon individual magistrates, or even upon sessions, the authority of summary convictions, without the intervention of jurors, they have limited the penalties for the offences created or punished by them within narrow generally, but always within prescribed bounds; while, with respect to fines, imprisonment, and even transportation, they have, of necessity perhaps, left to them the same latitude of apportionment as to the judges of the superior courts, although frequently persons without the same professional experience, the same familiar acquaintance with the multiplied inducements to the commission of crimes, or the same means of discrimination respecting the effects of punishment. The present purpose is, therefore, to impress upon the minds of those who are only commencing their career in the public duties of magistracy, not merely the justice and humanity, and therefore the duty, but even the policy also, of exercising the most unprejudiced and temperate discrimination in the distribution of punishments, on account of the salutary consequences which may reasonably be expected from it. The punishments ordained by municipal regulations may not improperly be designated by the epithets 'admonitory,' 'exemplary,' and 'vindictive.' To discriminate further than this, might perhaps incur the imputation of fanciful refinement; but thus far it may not be too much to insist. The first suggestions of common sense and common benevolence need not wait for the sanction of experiment, for they are to be found in the very rudiments of civilization. To the novice in delinquency, punishment is intended primarily to operate as an individual admonition; and where the heart has not been absolutely depraved, but only the passions excited, or the temerity of youth stimulated by excessive temptation or the influence of bad example, it will frequently have its due effect, if administered with that moderation which corrects without degrading. Nemo repente turpissimus, is an adage as true in point of fact as necessary to be kept in mind by those, whose rank and duties call upon them to mark with precision of punishment the deviation of ignorance and frailty from the path of rectitude. On a repetition of offences, where it is ascertained, indeed, that admonition has failed to correct, to deter, by making the culprit an example, becomes a duty to society: for compassion to the individual may then well give way to the general protection of the social system. Nevertheless, till amendment has become entirely hopeless, the severity of punishment should be short of that which cuts off all retreat from an association with the vicious. The third, and last, stage of depravity is that alone in which moderation may cease to be considered as an attribute of justice. In that extremity, society has an ample right to manifest its resentment; and the administrators of its laws are justified in becoming the ministers of its wrath; because cutting off (by removal or disgrace) the morbid member from the general body becomes the only method of preventing the communication of contagion."

(3.) In Trials of Traverses.

For information as to traverses generally, see title Traverse, post.

The trials for misdemeanors are not in general brought on till after the felonies.

Then may be called the persons bound by recognizance at the last sessions, Traverses tried. to prosecute their traverses at the present sessions. For if a person indicted for an assault or misdemeanor do appear, and plead not guilty, and traverse the indictment, he shall enter into his recognizance to prosecute his traverse at the next quarter sessions. For, in Bumpsted's case, Cro. Car. 448, the whole court was of opinion, that justices of the peace may not inquire, try, and determine civil offences, in one and the same day; for the party ought to have a convenient time to provide for the trial.

A defendant cannot be tried on any traverse until he shall have obtained from the clerk of the peace a record of the proceedings, and a venire facias, which he must get returned by the under-sheriff, and his traverse must afterwards be entered with the clerk of the peace.

Where a bill for an assault or misdemeanor is found against a defendant not in custody, he cannot be tried at the same session, unless under the 60 Geo. III. and 1 Geo. IV. c. 4, or by the consent of the prosecutors. See Traverse, post.

And, on the trial of a traverse, the defendant must appear in the court, at the bar, in his proper person; and then the indictment is read to the jury: and the prosecutor and his witnesses are called to give evidence, and are heard; and if the defendant be found guilty, the court sets a fine upon him adequate to the offence, or other punishment as the law directs.

In cases of assault, the court frequently recommends the defendant to talk with the prosecutor,—that is, to make him amends for the injury done him; and if the prosecutor come and acknowledge a satisfaction received, the court will set a small fine on the defendant.

“But this,” says Blackstone, “surely is a dangerous practice; and, though it may be entrusted to the prudence and discretion of the judges in the superior courts of record, it ought never to be allowed in local or inferior jurisdictions, such as the quarter sessions; where prosecutions for assaults are by this means too frequently commenced, rather for private lucre than for the great ends of public justice. Above all, it should never be suffered where the testimony of the prosecutor himself is necessary to convict the defendant; for by this means the rules of evidence are entirely subverted: the prosecutor becomes in effect a plaintiff, and yet is suffered to bear witness for himself.” See Stuart, Vol. I.

Sometimes the prosecutor and defendant agree before the defendant pleads to the indictment; and then the defendant comes into court in his proper person, and pleads guilty to the indictment; and upon proving, by a subscribing witness, a general release executed by the prosecutor, the defendant submits to a small fine, such as the court is pleased to impose. Cro. Cir. C. 21.

There are frequent prosecutions at the sessions for trifling assaults; in which case it is advisable for a defendant not to put himself to the expense of trying the indictment, but to give notice to the prosecutor that he intends to plead guilty to the indictment; in which case the prosecutor attends the court with his witnesses, and gives evidence of the nature of the offence; and then the court proceeds to fine the defendant: but the court will admit the defendant to call such witnesses as he desires, and will examine them by way of mitigation. Cro. Cir. C. 22.

IV. The Jurisdiction, Powers, and Duties of the Sessions.

(1.) In what Matters.

The court of quarter sessions has a jurisdiction criminal and civil, given to it by the commission of the peace itself, as settled under the 18 Edw. III. c. 2, civil and 34 Edw. III. c. 1, and by the express provisions of numerous statutes.

IN WHAT MATTERS.

(1) CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.—As far as respects its jurisdiction to hear and determine indictments, it appears to derive its origin from the 18 Edw. III. c. 2, and 34 Edw. III. c. 1, already mentioned.

These statutes are as follow :

18 Edw. III. s. 2, c. 2.—“Item, that two or three of the best of reputation in the counties shall be assigned keepers of the peace by the king's commission ; and, at what time need shall be, the same, with other wise and learned in the law, shall be assigned by the king's commission to hear and determine felonies and trespasses done against the peace in the same counties, and to inflict punishment reasonably, according to law and reason, and the manner of the deed.”

34 Edw. III. c. 1.—“First, that in every county of England shall be assigned, for the keeping of the peace, one lord, and with him three or four of the most worthy in the county, with some learned in the law, and they shall have power to restrain the offenders, rioters, and all other barrators, and to pursue, arrest, take, and chastise them, according to their trespass or offence ; and to cause them to be imprisoned and duly punished, according to the law and customs of the realm, and according to that which to them shall seem best to do by their discretions and good advisement ; and also to inform them, and to inquire of all those that have been pillors and robbers in the parts beyond the sea, and be now come again, and go wandering, and will not labour as they were wont in times past, and to take and arrest all those that they may find by indictment, or by suspicion, and to put them in prison ; and to take of all them that be not of good fame, where they shall be found, sufficient surety and mainprize of their good behaviour towards the king and his people, and the other duly to punish, to the intent that the people be not by such rioters or rebels troubled nor endamaged, nor the peace blemished, nor merchants nor other passing by the highways of the realm disturbed, nor put in the peril which may happen of such offenders. And also to hear and determine at the king's suit all manner of felonies and trespasses done in the same county according to the laws and customs aforesaid ; and that writs of oyer and determiner be granted according to the statutes thereof made, and that the justices which shall be thereto assigned be named by the court, and not by the party. And the king will, that all general inquiries before this time granted within any seigniorities, for the mischiefs and oppressions which have been done to the people by such inquiries, shall cease utterly and be repealed ; and that fines, which are to be made before justices for a trespass done by any person, be reasonable and just, having regard to the quantity of the trespass, and the causes for which they be made.”

the peace.

At first, as we have seen, ante, Vol. III. p. 447, the justices were only conservators of the peace, and the subsequent power to hear and determine, given by these statutes, means only that such an authority may be delegated to them by commission. 1 Bla. Com. 351 ; 1 Stra. 442. For this reason it is that a caption of an indictment found at the sessions, must show that the commission gave the court jurisdiction over the offence, as this cannot be intended. 1 Stra. 442. It has been said, that the commission of the peace was altered into the present form immediately after making those statutes (1 Stra. 442 ; 1 Bla. Com. 351) ; but some authors state, that it was settled as we find it at present by the judges about the thirty-third year of Queen Elizabeth. 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 8. The jurisdiction over indictments may be collected from the terms of the commission, which we shall here again set out, so far as it relates to the power of justices in sessions :—The first part of the commission will be found, Vol. III. p. 449. The second part is as follows :

Form of commission as to sessions.

“We have also assigned you, and every two or more of you (of whom any one of you, the aforesaid A. B., C. D., &c., we will shall be one), our justices, to inquire the truth more fully, by the oath of good and lawful men of the aforesaid county, by whom the truth of the matter shall be the better known, of all and all manner of felonies, poisonings, enchantments, sorceries, arts magic, trespasses, forestallings, regratings, ingrossings, and extortions whatsoever ; and of all and singular other crimes and offences of which the justices of our peace may or ought lawfully to inquire, by whomsoever and after what manner soever in the said county done or perpetrated, or which shall happen to be there done or attempted ; and also of all those who, in the aforesaid counties, in companies against our peace, in disturbance of our people, with armed force, have gone or rode, or hereafter shall presume to go or ride; and also of all those who have there lain in wait, or hereafter shall presume to lie in wait, to maim, or cut, or kill our people; and also of all victuallers, and all and singular other persons, who, in the abuse of weights or measures, or in selling victuals, against the form of the ordinances and statutes, or any one of them, therefore made for the common benefit of England, and our people thereof, have offended or attempted, or hereafter shall presume in the said county to offend or attempt; and also of all sheriffs, bailiffs, stewards, constables, keepers of gaols, and other officers, who, in the execution of their offices about the premises, or any of them, have unduly behaved themselves, or hereafter shall presume to behave themselves unduly, or have been or shall happen hereafter to be careless, remiss, or negligent, in our aforesaid county; and of all and singular articles and circumstances, and all other things whatsoever, that concern the premises, or any of them, by whomsoever and after what manner soever in our aforesaid county done or perpetrated, or which hereafter shall there happen to be done or attempted in what manner soever; and to inspect all indictments whatsoever so before you, or any of you, taken or to be taken, or before others, late our justices of the peace in the aforesaid county, made or taken, and not yet determined; and to make and continue processes thereupon against all and singular the persons so indicted, or who before you hereafter shall happen to be indicted, until they can be taken, surrender themselves, or be outlawed; and to hear and determine all and singular the felonies, poisonings, enchantments, sorceries, arts magic, trespasses, forestallings, regratings, ingrossings, extortions, unlawful assemblies, indictments aforesaid, and all and singular other the premises, according to the laws and statutes of England, as in the like case it has been accustomed or ought to be done; and the same offenders and every of them, for their offences by fines, ransoms, amerciaments, forfeitures, and other means, as, according to the law and custom of England, or form of the ordinances and statutes aforesaid, it has been accustomed or ought to be done to chastise and punish.

"Provided always, that if a case of difficulty upon the determination of any of the premises before you, or any two or more of you, shall happen to arise, then let judgment in no wise be given thereon before you, or any two or more of you, unless in the presence of one of our justices of the one or other bench, or of one of our justices appointed to hold the assizes in the aforesaid county.

"And therefore we command you, and every of you, that to keeping the peace, ordinances, statutes, and all and singular other the premises, you diligently apply yourselves; and that at certain days and places which you, or any such two or more of you as is aforesaid, shall appoint for these purposes, into the premises ye make inquiries; and all and singular the premises hear and determine, and perform and fulfil them in the aforesaid form, doing therein what to justice appertains, according to the law and custom of England; saving to us the amerciaments and other things to us therefrom belonging.

"And we command, by the tenor of these presents, our sheriff of W., that at certain days and places which you, or any such two or more of you as is aforesaid, shall make known to him, he cause to come before you, or such two or more of you, as aforesaid, so many and such good and lawful men of his bailiwick (as well within liberties as without), by whom the truth of the matter in the premises shall be the better known and inquired into.

"Lastly, we have assigned to you the aforesaid A. B., keeper of the rolls of our peace in our said county: and therefore you shall cause to be brought before you and your said fellows, at the days and places aforesaid, the writs, precepts, processes, and indictments, aforesaid, that they may be inspected, and, by a due course, determined, as is aforesaid."

We have also assigned you and every two or more of you]—Here beginneth the second part of the commission, or the second assignment: all the business within which assignment belongeth to the sessions of the peace. Dalt. c. 5.

And by this it appeareth, that two justices may hold a sessions, but that one justice cannot. Crompt. 6, 7.

Of whom any one of you the aforesaid A. B., C. D., &c. we will shall be one]—This clause, which gives power to two or more justices to hear and determine offences, requires that at least one of those justices be of that select number, which is commonly termed of the quorum (from that word in the Latin commissions, Quorum—unum esse volumus). For those of the quorum were wont to be chosen specially for their knowledge in the laws; and this was it which led the makers of several ancient statutes expressly to enact, that some learned in the laws should be put into the commission of the peace; and (to say the truth) all statutes that require the presence of the quorum do tacitly

Must be two justices.

IN WHAT MATTERS.

Justices of quorum.

signify such a learned man. For, albeit that a discreet person (not conversant in the study of the laws) may sufficiently follow sundry particular directions concerning the service of the peace, yet when the proceedings must be by way of presentment or indictment, upon the evidence of witnesses, and oaths of jurors, and by the order of hearing and determining according to the straight rule and course of the law, it must be confessed that learning in the law is very necessary. Lamb. 48, 49.

26 Geo. 2, c. 27.

But learning being now greatly advanced and improved since the first institution of this office, this distinction is not of much use, but all or most of the justices are now equally assigned to be of the quorum; and by the 26 Geo. II. c. 27, no act, order, adjudication, warrant, indenture of apprenticeship, or other instrument done or executed by two or more justices, which doth not express that one or more of them is of the quorum (although the statutes respectively require that one of the justices shall be of the quorum), shall be impeached, set aside, or vacated, for that defect only.

7 Geo. 3, c. 21.

And by the 7 Geo. III. c. 21, in cities, boroughs, towns corporate, franchises, and liberties, which have only one justice of the quorum, all acts, orders, adjudications, warrants, indentures of apprenticeship, or other instruments, done or executed by two or more justices qualified to act therein, shall be valid and effectual in law, although neither of the said justices are of the quorum.

4 Geo. 4, c. 27.

And now the 4 Geo. IV. c. 27, after reciting the 7 Geo. III. c. 21, "and whereas it is expedient that the provisions of the said act should be extended to such cities and other jurisdictions as have two or any other limited number of justices of the quorum qualified to act within the same:" enacts, "that, from and after the passing of this act, in all cases where the number of justices of the peace for any city, borough, town corporate, franchise, liberty, or other local jurisdiction, is limited, and any one, two, or more of such justices only are of the quorum, all acts, orders, adjudications, warrants, indentures of apprenticeship, or other instruments, which shall be made, done, or executed, either in or out of the general quarter sessions or petty sessions, or any adjournment thereof, by virtue of any charter or grant, or by virtue of any act of Parliament made or to be made, by any two or more justices of the peace acting within the same, though neither of the said justices be of the quorum, shall be valid in law, to all intents and purposes, as if the said justices had been of the quorum; any grant, charter, law, or custom to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding."

Jury sworn.

By the oath of good and lawful men—That is, by a jury sworn.

Of all and all manner of felonies—That is, either by the common law or by statute. Crompton 8.

Felonies.

Felonies—Though the commission doth not mention murders and man-slaughters by express name, but only felonies generally, yet by these general words they have power to hear and determine murder and manslaughter, and also may take an indictment of se defendendo, contrary to the opinions of Fitzherbert and Staundforde. But though the justices have this power, yet they do not ordinarily proceed to hear and determine these offences, and rarely other offences without clergy, both because of the monition and clause in their commission, in case of difficulty to expect the presence of the justices of assize; and also because of the direction of the 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13, which directs justices of the peace, in case of manslaughter and other felonies, to take the examination of the prisoner and the information of the fact, and put the same in writing, and then to bail the prisoner, if there be cause, and to certify the same with the bail at the next gaol delivery: and, therefore, in cases of great moment, they bind over the prosecutors, and bail the party, if bailable, to the next gaol delivery; but in smaller matters, as petit larceny, and some cases within clergy, they bind over to the sessions: but this is only in point of discretion and convenience, not because they have not jurisdiction of the crime. 2 Hale, 46.

So, also, an inquisition of self-murder, if the body cannot be seen, and so not inquired of by the coroner, may be taken before justices of the peace; for it is a felony, and within the extent of their commission. 1 Hale, 414.

(a) By a bill before Parliament, it is proposed to give all justices the like power, whether of the quorum or not.

(b) See now the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, to the examination, Vol. II. p. 97, 98.

So also, if a person hath committed treason, though the justices have no cognizance of it as treason, yet they have cognizance of it as a felony, and as a breach of the peace; and, therefore, a justice of the peace, upon information on oath, may issue his warrant to take the traitor, and may take his examination, and commit him to prison. 1 Hale, 580.

High treason is not mentioned in the commission, and, therefore, the quarter sessions have no jurisdiction to try that offence, though the justices may commit the offender to take his trial before a higher tribunal. 2 Hale, 44; 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 59; Bac. Ab. Justices of Peace, E.; Dirk. Sess. 104.

They had formerly, however, the power, under some ancient statutes, of hearing and determining particular kinds of treason, and it seems doubtful whether they may not now try prisoners for clipping coin, for it may be questioned whether the 3 Hen. V. c. 7, is repealed; and Mr. Curwood, in his edition of Hawkins, recognizes that statute as still existing. See 2 Haw. P. C. 55; see, however, 2 H. P. C. 45.

But although the justices in sessions have thus jurisdiction over almost all felonies, it is not the practice for them to try any capital felonies, unless in sessions holden under charters, where the power of life and death, according to the peculiar expression, is specifically entrusted to the judges.

It is now the common practice to try only petty larcenies and misdemeanors in this court; and felonies of a higher nature, as murders and felonies, upon conviction of which the prisoner must pray the benefit of clergy, (a) or the benefit of the statute, are usually remitted for a more solemn trial to the assizes. 4 Bla. Com. 271, n. 2, 234, n. 6; 2 Hale, 46; 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 57; Bac. Ab. Justices of the Peace, E. 2, Cro. C. C. 14; Dick. Sess. 104, 5. This is the course adopted in every instance: first, on account of the clause in their commission in cases of difficulty to expect the presence of the justices of assize; and, secondly, by reason of the direction given by 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 2.

The sessions, however, have jurisdiction over capital offences of this nature; and, if they do proceed to judgment, in cases of difficulty, their judgment is not void, but is effectual till reversed for real error by a superior tribunal. Lamb, 50; 2 Hale, 46. An indictment lies at the quarter sessions for lighting fires on the coast, contrary to 47 Geo. III. sess. 2, c. 66; for, though in one section "the general quarter sessions" is omitted, yet it being in other parts of the act, the omission was merely a mistake. 4 M. & S. 71.

Poisonings].—The word in the Latin commissions was veneficia; and before the 9 Geo. II. c. 5, which abolisheth witchcraft, was in the English translations rendered witchcrafts.

Inchantments, Sorceries, Arts, Magic].—These also are abolished by the said statute, s. 3, which enacts, that no prosecution shall thereafter be commenced against any person for witchcraft, sorcery, enchantment, or conjuration.

And, from the words continuing in the commission when the crime itself is abolished, we may observe the averseness in the superior courts from altering ancient forms.

Trespasses].—This is founded on the 34 Edw. III. c. 1, which enacts that the justices assigned shall have power to restrain the offenders, rioters, and all other barrators, and to chastise them according to their trespass or offence. The word for trespasses, in the old Latin commissions, is transgressiones.

And upon this Mr. Hawkins observes, that the word trespass is of very general extent, and in a large sense not only comprehends all inferior offences, which are properly and directly against the peace, as assaults and batteries, and such like, but also all others which are so only by construction, as all breaches of the law in general are said to be. Yet it hath been of late settled, that justices of the peace have no jurisdiction over forgery or perjury at the common law; the principal reason of which resolution, he says, as he apprehended, was, that inasmuch as the chief end of the institution of the office of these justices was for the preservation of the peace against personal wrongs and open violence, and the word trespass, in its most proper and natural sense, is taken for such kind of injuries, it shall be understood in that sense only in the said statute and commission, or at the most to extend to such other offences only as have a direct and immediate tendency to cause such breaches of the peace, as libels, and such like, which on this account have been adjudged indictable before justices of the peace. 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 38.

Treason.

MATTERS.

These exceptions, however, alluded to by Mr. Hawkins, are now considered to rest more upon authority than principle. 2 East, 15, 18, 20, post, 474.

Perjury by statute.

The particular provisions of the 5 Eliz. c. 9, are such, that if the offence of perjury be indicted under that statute (which rarely, if ever, happens), the justices have jurisdiction over it by the express words of the statute. 1 Salk. 406; 4 Bla. Com. 271, n., 11. See ante, Perjury.

Conspiracies.

The term trespasses in the commission, subject to these exceptions, not only includes direct breaches of the peace, but also all such offences as have a tendency thereto, and, on that ground, conspiracies have been holden to be cognizable by the sessions, not as actual breaches of the peace, but as tending to produce them. 2 East, 22, 23; 1 Bla. Rep. 368; 3 Burr. 1320; Haw. b. 2, c. 8, s. 63; Dick. Sess. 105. And, for the same reason, to solicit a servant to steal his master's goods, is a misdemeanor, though it be not charged in the indictment that the servant stole the goods, nor that any other act was done, except the soliciting and inciting; and such offence is indictable at the sessions, having a tendency to a breach of the peace. R. v. Higgins, 2 East, 5, post, 474.

Cheats.

So they have a jurisdiction over cheats in general. R. v. Brayne, and R. v. Beale, 1 East, 183, n.

Forgery.

Though they cannot take cognizance of forgery as a cheat; and therefore, where objections were taken to an indictment, for having placed or forged the letters R. E. at the bottom of a certain schedule, that the substantial charge, if any, was the commission of a forgery, an offence which the quarter sessions have no jurisdiction to try: first, because, in cases of misdemeanor, they can only try breaches of the peace, or such acts as have a manifest tendency thereto, and the word "trespasses," in the commission of the peace (the only word under which the jurisdiction could be sustained, if at all), has always had that construction; and, secondly, that whenever the sessions have exercised jurisdiction over any other description of misdemeanor, it has, by virtue of particular statutes, given them such jurisdiction in express terms: it was held, that as in effect it was an indictment for forgery, it was a case in which a court of general quarter sessions of the peace for a county had no jurisdiction. R. v. Gibbs, 1 East, 173.

Gaming.

Nor can they determine an indictment for gaming, on the 18 Geo. II. R. v. Frederick, 2 Ld. Ken. 116.

Assaults, Barratry,
Libels, &c.

But their jurisdiction extends to assaults and batteries, Haw. b. 2, c. 8, s. 63; Bac. Ab. Justices of the Peace, E. 3; barratry, 2 Saun. 308, n.; 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 65; Bac. Ab. Justices of the Peace, E. 3; libels, 3 Salk. 194; 1 Lev. 139; 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 64; night-walking, and haunting of bawdy-houses, 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 64.

Forestallings, &c.

Forestallings, Regrations, Engrossings—Over these offences, the justices in sessions had jurisdiction given to them by the 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 14, which is now repealed; but the same still continue offences punishable by indictment at the common law.

Extortions.

Extortions—The intent of this word is, to inquire of those who have done excessive wrongs; for wrong done by any one is properly trespass, but excessive wrong done by any one is called extortion; and this is more properly in officers, as sheriffs, mayors, bailiffs, escheators, and other officers whatsoever (as well spiritual as temporal), who, by colour of their office, have done great oppression and excessive wrong to the king's subjects, in taking excessive rewards or fees for doing their offices. Crompt. 8.

The justices have no express power given to them over this offence by any statute; upon which Mr. Hawkins observes, that justices of the peace have jurisdiction of all inferior crimes within their commission, whether such crimes be mentioned in any statute concerning them or not; for that all such crimes are either directly or at least by consequence and judgment of law against the peace; and upon this ground principally, he says, as he apprehended, it was lately resolved, that they may take an indictment of extortion. 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 39.

And of all and singular other crimes and offences of which the justices of our peace may or ought lawfully to inquire—Which general words seem to include the vast number of offences, over which they have a jurisdiction given them by many statutes, and which are not particularly mentioned in the commission.

IN WHAT MATTERS.

Other crimes, &c.

And also all of those who in Companies against our Peace in Disturbance of our People with armed force have gone or rode—By these words they are to inquire of riots, routs, and all unlawful assemblies. Crompt. 8.

Riots, &c.

Weights or Measures—This clause was first established by the 34 Edw. III. c. 5. And they have further power given herein by several subsequent statutes, all which statutes must be strictly pursued in relation to the several offences.

Weights and measures.

Selling Victuals—Over this they have a jurisdiction given to them by the 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 15, intituled, "The Bill of Conspiracies of Victuallers and Craftsmen."

Selling victuals.

And also of all Sheriffs, Bailiffs, Stewards, Constables, Keepers of Gaols, and other Officers, who in the execution of their Offices have unduly behaved Themselves—This clause is as ancient as the 4 Edw. III. c. 2, on which it is founded.

Officers misbe-
selves.

And it hath been suffered to remain in the commission, not as of any necessity at all (since it is incident to every court of record to do correction upon whatsoever officers and ministers do serve them), but only for the plainer declaration of the power of these justices in that behalf, and for the more assured terrifying of such as shall, either of contempt or negligence, do that which is amiss. Lamb. 49; see R. v. Jaram, 7 D. & R. 163, post, 477.

And to inspect all Indictments so before you taken—But they cannot proceed upon indictments taken before coroners, or justices of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, but on indictments taken before the sheriff in his tourn they may proceed. Hale's Sum. 168.

Or before other our late Justices—This is founded on the 11 Hen. VI. c. 6, which enacts that no indictment, plea, suit, or process, shall be discontinued by a new commission; but the justices in the new commission, after they shall have the records of the same pleas and processes before them, shall have power to continue the said pleas and processes, and to hear and finally determine the same, as the former justices might have done.

And to make and continue Processes—This is by venire, distringas, capias, or exigent, as the case shall be. And it differs from a warrant, in that a warrant is only to attach and convene the party before indictment, and may be either in the name of the king or of the justice; but the process issues after indictment, and must be in the name of the king only. Dalt. c. 193.

Processes.

Until they can be Taken, Surrender Themselves, or be Outlawed—For the process is sent out to this end, that either the party shall come in to answer and to be justified by the law; or else that he shall, for his contumacy, be deprived of the benefit of the law. Lamb. 521.

pearing, &c.

Or be Outlawed—It is observable that the power of the justices stops here, and goes no further; so that they cannot make out a capias utlagatum, but the outlawry must be certified into the King's Bench. Lamb. 521; 2 Hale, 52.

Outlawry.

But by 12 Rcp. 103, they that have power to award process of outlawry, have also a power to award a capias utlagatum, as incident to their authority and jurisdiction.

Hear and Determine—This power was first given to them by the 18 Ed. III. st. 2, c. 2, and afterwards confirmed and enlarged by divers other statutes.

and determine.

Yet this clause doth not in propriety make the justices of the peace justices of oyer and terminer, because that is a distinct commission; and, therefore, a statute, limiting an offence to be heard and determined before justices of oyer and terminer, gives not the power therein to justices of the peace. Hale's Sum. 165, post, 474.

inquisition be taken, and an ignoramus found, they may deliver him, as it seemeth. 2 Hale, 46, 47.

Likewise, although commissioners of oyer and terminer may indict and try at the same sessions, yet it hath been ruled otherwise in cases of justices of the peace, unless by consent: but certainly constant usage and learned opinion must give that exposition upon those resolutions, that it must extend only to popular actions or indictments for misdemeanors, and not to cases of felony. 2 Hale, 48.

Power to fine,
&c., and punish.

By Fines, Ransoms, Amerciaments, Forfeitures, and other Means, to chastise and punish—Hereby the justices are now armed with far more ample authority and power than the ancient conservators of the peace were; for they had no power to convene the offender before them, nor to examine, hear, or determine the cause, nor to punish, except in some few cases, as mentioned before. Dalt. c. 6.

But the justices may not award any recompense to the party wronged, otherwise than by persuasion. Dalt. c. 5.

Nevertheless, these words are inserted, not as of necessity (for the punishment of all offenders is implied in the word determine), but for the plainer declaration of the justices' power, and for the more assured terrifying of offenders. Lamb. 49.

Days of holding

At certain Days and Places—That is, when they hold their sessions, which they are empowered and required to do by several statutes.

Custos rotulorum

Lastly, we have Assigned you, the aforesaid A. B., Keeper of the Rolls—This is in pursuance of the 37 Hen. VIII. c. 1, which enacts, that the lord chancellor shall, by commission, assign such person to be custos rotulorum, as the king shall by writing, under his hand, appoint. See ante, Custos Rotulorum, Vol. I.

General observations.

It seems to be now clear that justices of the peace may try offences, though created by statute since the institution of their office, unless there be some special direction that the offence shall be heard and determined before another tribunal. (a)

Where, indeed, a statute limits an offence to be tried before justices of oyer and terminer, the sessions cannot try it; for, though justices of the peace are authorized to hear and determine, they are not what the law intends by justices of oyer and terminer, as there is a distinct commission of that name. 1 Hale, 165. Where, however, a statute creates a misdemeanor, and directs that the offender shall be committed unto the next court of oyer and terminer, great session, or gaol delivery, and, in case of indictment found, shall plead, and be tried without traverse, he may be prosecuted at the court of quarter sessions. The King v. Cock, 4 M. & S. 71. In the result, it appears that the sessions have power to try all indictable offences, whether by common law or statute, with the exception of treason, misprision of treason, præmunire, forgery, and perjury, at common law; and the two last exceptions are not capable of being referred to any principle, as the reason assigned, that they do not directly tend to produce breaches of the peace, would equally apply to many other offences over which the sessions have undoubted jurisdiction. In a case where a question was raised, whether the sessions had power to try an indictment for a solicitation of a party to steal (b)—Lord Kenyon said, "I am clearly of opinion, that it is indictable at the quarter sessions, as falling in with that class of offences which, being violations of the law of the land, have a tendency, as has been said, to a breach of the peace, and are, therefore, cognizable by that jurisdiction. To this general rule there are indeed two exceptions—forgery and perjury: why excepted, I know not; but, having been expressly so adjudged, I will not break through the rules of law. No other exceptions, however, have been allowed; and, therefore, this falls within the general rule." Talf. Dick. Sess. 89.

IN WHAT MATTERS.

(2) CIVIL JURISDICTION]—The civil jurisdiction of the court of quarter-sessions may be said to consist of that part of their business which is entirely submitted to the judgment of the court, without the intervention of the jury. This, it may be seen, is noticed slightly in the commission: but by far the greater part of the civil business of the sessions comes before the justices as a court of appeal deriving their authority from various statutes. This appellant jurisdiction extends over penal convictions, orders of justices, and matters connected with the administration of the poor laws, the vagrant laws, and the highway acts; and is discussed, in its various branches, through the titles of this work. On the subject of appeal itself, generally one of the most difficult and important on which the sessions are required to determine, full information will be found under title Appeal, Vol. I.

(2) Civil Jurisdiction.

Appellant.

Besides this appellant jurisdiction, the sessions have, in some matters, an original jurisdiction. They have, in general, an original jurisdiction to do whatever may be done by two magistrates, except where the statute empowering the magistrate to act gives an appeal to the sessions.

Original.

This jurisdiction is most usually exercised in cases of apprenticeship, in the allowance of articles of the peace, and in the disposal of vagrants committed to the sessions for punishment. Every information regarding these matters will be found under their respective titles.

In this place, it will only be necessary to give some cases illustrative of the general nature of this civil jurisdiction.

Where authority is given to two justices to do any act, the sessions may do it in all cases, except where appeal is directed to the sessions. Per Holt, C. J., 1 Ld. Raym. 426.

The sessions may do what two justices may.

But the sessions cannot suppress a licensed alehouse, unless for disorder. R. v. Randall, 2 Salk. 470.

A justice cannot act at sessions, where a matter which concerns any office he may hold comes in question. This was decided in the case of Foxham tithing, in the county of Wilts. 2 Salk. 607. A justice of the peace was surveyor of the highways, and a matter which concerned his office coming in question at the sessions, he joined in making the order, and his name was put in the caption. By Holt, C. J.—"It ought not to be; as, if an action be brought by my Lord Chief-Justice Trevor in the Court of Common Pleas, it must be before Edward Neville, Knight, and his associates, and not before Thomas Trevor, &c.;" and it was quashed.

Justice acting in a matter concerning himself.

A justice of the peace who is a rated inhabitant of a parish, cannot vote at the sessions, either upon the determination of an appeal against the accounts of the overseers of his parish, or upon the propriety of granting a case for the opinion of the Court of King's Bench. R. v. Gudderidge, 8 D. & R. 217. See further, Justices, Vol. III. p. 472.

The court cannot impose more than one fine for non-repair of a bridge. R. v. Machynlleth, 4 B. & A. 469.

Fine for non-repair.

The sessions may proceed to outlawry in cases of indictments found before them, and that by the common law; and in cases of popular actions, by the 21 Jac. c. 4. But they cannot issue a capias utlagatum, but must return the record of the outlawry into the King's Bench, and there process of capias utlagatum shall issue. 2 Hale, 52; Lamb. 521; Dalt. c. 193, p. 473.

But they that have power to award process of outlawry have also a power to award a capias utlagatum, as incident to their authority and jurisdiction. 12 Rep. 103.

with their orders; but the ordinary and proper method is by indictment. R. v. Bartlett; 2 Sess. Ca. 176. See ante, Process.

The sessions are not obliged to give any reason of their judgment in the orders they make, any more than other of the courts of law. 2 Salk. 607, post, 478.

A rule of practice at the sessions will not control the express words of an act of Parliament. R. v. Just. of Lincolnshire, 5 D. & R. 347, S. C.; 3 B. & C. 548.

The quarter sessions may apply the county stock to contest the legality of a fine imposed on the county for not repairing its gaol. R. v. Essex, Nolan, 56.

Justices at sessions appointed a committee of twelve magistrates to inspect the state of a county bridge and to make any new contract for repairing or rebuilding, to be executed by the clerk of the peace on behalf of the county. Afterwards they made an order, adopting a contract for rebuilding proposed by the committee, and directed it to be prepared by the clerk of the peace, which contract having afterwards been executed by the clerk, the justices at a subsequent sessions confirmed all the resolutions of the committee, and ordered the clerk to perform their directions in respect to the contract.—The acts of the committee so confirmed are the acts of the sessions, and the authority given to the committee and exercised by them, is not such a delegation of power by the sessions as will invalidate their orders. R. v. Just. of Glamorganshire, 2 T. R. 279; Nolan, 249, S. C.

The sessions are not authorized to order the payment by the bridgemaster to the clerk of the peace of a per-centage on all money raised for the repair of bridges in a particular district, in lieu of all his fees for indictments, presentments, &c., for bridges within it; although such per-centage was claimed as an ancient fee, and had been paid without dispute for a long period of time. R. v. Houldgrave, 1 B. & A. 312.

The sessions have no jurisdiction, under 55 Geo. III. c. 51, s. 16, to make a prospective order for a compensation thereafter to be made to the clerk of the peace; and, therefore, where a county treasurer, in obedience to such an order, made the payment, and that payment was afterwards, by an order of sessions, allowed in his accounts, the Court of King's Bench quashed so much of the order of sessions as allowed that item. R. v. G. Williams, Esq., 3 B. & A. 215.

In the same case it was made a question whether, under the 55 Geo. III. c. 51, s. 16, the sessions have a power to make any compensation to the clerk of the peace.

Justices, upon appeal from a rate to the quarter sessions, cannot make a new, but only quash the subsisting rate. R. v. St. Andrew's, Holborn, 3 Burr. 1458.

The sessions have no original jurisdiction over overseers' accounts. R. v. Portsmouth, 1 W. Bla. 395.

So, they have no jurisdiction to make an original order for the late overseers of the poor to pay money to their successors. R. v. Whitear, 3 Burr. 1365.

So, orders upon surveyors of highways to pass their accounts and pay over monies cannot be made originally by the general quarter sessions. R. v. Hartshorn, 2 Burr. 745.

An original order of bastardy may be made at the quarter sessions. R. v. Greaves, 2 Doug. 632.

Where a person is overcharged in a poor-rate, the sessions may relieve him on appeal, and amend the rate by lessening the sum assessed on him under the 17 Geo. II. c. 38. R. v. Cheshunt, 2 T. R. 623.

And the sessions may order an apprentice to be discharged and money to be returned, though bound to a trade not mentioned in the act; but the order must state that the defendant appeared, or was summoned and made default; and that the master had received money with the apprentice. R. v. Aimes, 1 Bott's P. L. 574.

The court of sessions is merely ministerial, as to registering meeting-houses under the Act of Toleration. R. v. Just. of Derbyshire, 1 W. Bla. 606.

Tone are created a corporation, with certain funds, and directed to keep an account of their receipts and disbursements, which shall every year be examined, stated, corrected, and allowed by the Bishop of Bath and Wells, and the justices of the peace for the county of Somerset, or any five or more, at their first general quarter sessions after a certain day, at which time they are to direct a distribution of the surplus profits, if any: held, that the sessions in one year have no authority to revise or correct any errors in the accounts upon which a balance was struck and allowed at the sessions in any preceding year. R. v. River Tone Conservators, 8 T. R. 286.

A charter of Car. II. gave to the lord of an ancient liberty the execution of all writs, processes, and precepts of his majesty within the liberty, and contained a non intromittant clause, restraining the sheriff from entering, "unless it touched his majesty or his crown, and unless upon the default of the bailiffs and officers of the lord:" held, that by virtue of this charter, and the provisions of the statute 27 Hen. VIII. c. 24, s. 7, the lord's bailiff was bound to obey the sheriff's precept for returning jurors from the liberty to the quarter sessions; and that for disobedience to such precept, the justices at sessions had jurisdiction to impose a fine upon the bailiff. R. v. Joram, 7 D. & R. 163; 4 B. & C. 692, S. C.

The consent of parties that the sessions shall delegate their authority, concludes such parties, and gives validity to all acts of the sessions in consequence of such consent. R. v. Just. of Northampton, Cald. 30, S. P.; R. v. Just. of Devonshire, Cald. 32.

The principle that every court has a power to fine for contempt, was clearly established in the case of the King v. Davidson, 4 B. & A. 329. "No lawyer," said Abbott, C. J., in delivering his opinion on this case, "can doubt the power of every court to fine for contempt." And in the same case, Bayley, J., said—"Of the power of a judge to fine for contempt of court, I have not the least doubt; and I am of opinion, also, that the judge alone is competent to determine whether what is done be or be not a contempt; and that neither this court, nor any other co-ordinate court, has a right to examine the question, whether his discretion, in that respect, was fitly and properly exercised." Best, J., also there said, "No man who pretends to any knowledge of the law can doubt, that a judge of a court of record has authority to fine or imprison for any contempt committed in the face of the court. From the earliest period of our history this authority has been exercised. The year-books record instances of such commitments, and there are similar instances in other books of reports. At those times when our ancestors have abolished or restrained improper authorities, they have not touched this, because they found it essential to the due administration of justice. A court of nisi prius is a court of record, and the judge presiding in it is, therefore, invested with the power of committing for contempt." See also the case of R. v. Clement, 4 B. & A. 218; Examination, Vol. II.

All the cases on this subject with respect to the power of courts of record to fine and imprison for contempt, are collected together very ably by Mr. Justice Wilmot, with a view to a judicial opinion in the King v. Almon, Wilmot's Notes, 243.

A court of gaol delivery has the power to make an order to prohibit the publication of the proceedings pending a trial likely to continue for several successive days, and to punish disobedience to such order by fine. King v. Clement, 4 B. & A. 218.

It seemeth certain, that the sessions have no authority to amerce any justice for his non-attendance at the sessions, as the judges of assize may for the absence of any such justice at the gaol delivery; for it is a general rule, that inter pares non est potestas, it being reasonable rather to refer the punishment of persons in a judicial office, in relation to their behaviour in such office, to other judges of a superior station, than to those of the same rank with themselves. And therefore it seems to have been holden, that if a justice at the sessions, who is not of the quorum, shall use such expressions towards another who is of the quorum, for which, if he were a private person, he might be committed or bound to his good behaviour, yet the sessions hath no authority to commit him, or to bind him to his good behaviour; and yet it seems to be agreed, that if a justice give just cause to any person to demand the surety of the peace against him, he may be compelled by any other justice to find such security; for the public peace requires an immediate remedy in all such cases. 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 46.

Need not give reasons for.

The sessions are not compellable to give any reason for their judgment in the order they make. 2 Salk. 607.

Where a reason is assigned as the foundation of a judgment, all presumption or intention that the court went upon better grounds, is excluded. R. v. Upton Gray, Cald. 308.

It is questionable whether, when the sessions state facts fully and particularly, from whence they infer fraud, the Court of King's Bench can draw their own conclusion from those facts, without having regard to the adjudication of the court of sessions. R. v. Woodland, 1 T. R. 261.

The court will not intend any thing to vitiate an order of sessions. R. v. Higher Walton, Burr, S. C. 162.

Amendment of.

By Holt, C. J., the sessions is all as one day, and the justices may alter their judgments at any time, whilst it continues. 2 Salk. 606; 1 Stra. 383. See Amendment, Vol. I.

Mistake in.

A wrong entry of judgment by mistake, and not corrected during the sessions, is no ground for a re-hearing. And where one judgment is entered at the sessions for another, the King's Bench cannot interfere, unless the mistake is apparent on the record. R. v. Justices of Leicestershire, 1 M. & S. 442.

How far conclusive, &c.

We have already noticed the effect of a judgment of sessions, as to how far it is conclusive on the parties, &c. See Evidence, Vol. II. p. 50.

The Court of King's Bench will take cognizance of a case reserved by the sessions accompanying the proceedings so removed; and where the sessions, upon proof that the appellant had received from the clerk of the convicting magistrates, a copy of his conviction, signed and sealed by such justices, purporting on the face of it to have been made upon the information of B. and C. (though such copy was drawn up on the back of the paper which contained the information of A., the true informer, B. and C. being only the witnesses who had been examined in support of the charge, and though the same justices had returned to the sessions, to be filed of record, a regular conviction of the same date, signed and sealed by them, on parchment, stating it to have been made on the information of A., and supported by the evidence of B. and C., according to the truth of the case), had quashed the latter conviction so returned by the justices, as being at variance with the minutes of the conviction delivered to the appellant, without entering into the merits of the case, upon a preliminary objection taken by the appellant, this court quashed the order of sessions generally; thereby setting up again the regular conviction, considering that the variance arose from the mere mistake and irregularity of the justice's clerk, and that the appellant was not really surprised by it, but had waived his appeal on the merits. R. v. Allen, 15 East, 333.

When the sessions adjudge a place to be a vill by reputation, as a substantive fact, the Court of King's Bench is precluded from going into the question, notwithstanding the sessions state all the evidence particularly on which they formed their opinion. R. v. Ronton Abbey, 2 T. R. 207.

If the sessions draw a conclusion of fact, that the taking of a tenement is fraudulent, or that it does not amount to 10*l.* per annum, it is decisive in the Court of King's Bench, though they state all the facts, and refer the consideration of those questions to this court. R. v. Lamwinnio, 4 T. R. 473; Nolan, 19, S. C.

Though the sessions find that certain persons in the township were possessed of visible stocks in trade there, and were personally liable to be rated in respect thereof, if by law such property were liable to be rated; yet, if they also state that they were not satisfied from the evidence offered before them that there was any surplus profit on such stocks, by which they could amend a rate which omitted them, that concludes the question. R. v. Macdonald, 12 East, 324.

In R. v. Harding, 2 Sulk. 477, it is delivered as the resolution of the court, that a judge of nisi prius, by consent of parties, may make a rule to refer a cause; but the sessions cannot do so, though by consent. They may refer a thing to another to examine, and make report to them for their determination, but cannot refer a thing to be determined by the other.

But in R. v. the Justs. of Northampton, Cald. 30, on a motion to quash an order of sessions quashing a poor-rate, on the ground that the rate was by the sessions referred to two justices out of sessions, and that the sessions afterwards adopted their opinion, without exercising their own judgment, Ld. Mansfield said,—“If they did this of their own accord, without the consent of the parties, it cannot be supported: they are not warranted to delegate their authority: but, if they acted with the consent of the parties, I think they have done very right; and we will never suffer the party who consented to the reference to come here to set it aside; and I think it sufficient if the attorneys consented, and attended at the reference.” The case was sent back to the sessions to certify whether it was referred by consent; and afterwards the order was affirmed. See, further, ante, 467; Stuart, Vol. I.

A bill of exceptions will not lie to the justices in sessions on an appeal; for, as observed by Ld. Hardwicke, in the common case of bills of exceptions tendered to the judges, the jury alone are the proper persons who would be to decide whether they believe the evidence or not; the judges have nothing to do with the belief of the evidence; they are not to determine on its credibility, but on the consequences of law arising from it. But the justices at sessions are judges of the fact as well as law; they are jury as well as judges; it is in their breast only whether to believe or disbelieve the evidence; and who is to take upon himself to say what portion of the evidence they do believe, and what they do not? Suppose six of the justices believe the evidence, and two of them do not believe it, are the two to conclude the six as to the belief of the fact? When the justices specially state the fact, it is the act of the whole court; but here only two out of the whole number have sealed the bill of exceptions. R. v. Preston, Burr. S. C. 77.

In the case of Thornby v. Fleetwood, F., 6 G., which was upon a writ of error in the King's Bench, brought against a judgment in the Common Pleas, the court was equally divided, whereupon it was considered what was further to be done. And after several expedients which were judged impracticable, the parties at last consented that the judgment should be affirmed, so that the case thereupon might come before the House of Lords for a final determination; and Pratt, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court thus:—“The plaintiffs in error move us for an affirmance; as to that, you see the court is divided, and there can be no rule but in this case, because the party against whom it is to be affirmed is desirous and willing that it should be so. We are all of opinion, that upon his consent the judgment of the Common Pleas may be affirmed. But, lest this be brought in future ages as a precedent of an affirmance upon a division, we direct the officer to make the rule special in this case, on recital of the difference in opinion amongst the judges, and the consent of the party.” 1 Str. 383, 384.

Or, if the court shall be still divided, as so it may happen in small counties or towns corporate, where the justices are but few, or where the number is reduced by reason of the rest being interested, in order that the case may not be hung up for ever, it may be advisable (according to the course prescribed in the case of Thornby v. Fleetwood, above mentioned) for the court, by consent of the parties, to affirm or quash, and thereupon state the case especially, to be laid before the judges of assize, or rather before the Court of King's Bench, for the judges of assize are oftentimes sufficiently employed with the proper business of the circuit, without being importuned with these matters of inferior consequence.

SPECIAL CASE.

Where, upon an appeal against an order of removal, the justices at sessions were equally divided, and made an order that the hearing of the appeal should be adjourned, one of the justices who voted in favour of the respondent parish, being a rated inhabitant of that parish, an application for a certiorari to remove the order of sessions, in order that it might be quashed, was refused, on the ground that, even if the order of sessions was erroneous, the court had no jurisdiction to review it. This was decided in the case of the King v. the Justices of Monmouthshire, 8 B. & C. 139. "The late decisions," said Ld. Tenterden, in delivering the opinion of the court on this question, "establish, that we cannot assume to ourselves the jurisdiction of a court of error; and revise the judgments of the court of quarter sessions. Here a judgment has been pronounced by the court of quarter sessions, relating to a subject-matter over which that court had jurisdiction; and, assuming that judgment to be erroneous, I think we have not jurisdiction, as a court of error, to review it."

(3.) Of Stating a Special Case.

Reference to judge of assize.

Mr. Dickenson observes, that a reference to the judge of assize, either of the whole case, or of some point of legal difficulty involved in it, used formerly to be a common practice, but is, of late, fallen much into disuse. For this change many reasons might be adduced, but they are unnecessary here. If any particular circumstances should make this mode eligible, the right still continues; but it has generally given place to a more eligible one, which is that of stating a special case for the determination of the Court of King's Bench. Dick. Sessions, 627.

Special case.

The sessions do not always refer the whole case to the judge of assize: sometimes they refer only a particular point, and reserve the final determination of the whole matter to themselves. R. v. Tedford, 2 B. S. C. 57; 2 Sess. Cas. 243.

When the special case is granted, the object is carried into effect by the counsel agreeing to a statement of facts, which are usually corrected and settled by a reference to the chairman's notes. Id.

The case so settled, is to be signed by the junior counsel on each side. If no counsel are employed, or if they cannot agree upon a case, even with the assistance of the chairman, the latter may, with the concurrence of a majority of the justices on the bench, state and sign a special case himself. Id.

Form of the case.

There is no specific form or precedent, according to which a special case must be drawn; but, nevertheless, there are certain rules to be collected from a long succession of determinations, which are, in substance, as follow:—The justices, with regard to the civil business of the court, by the summary jurisdiction which is given to them, it has been observed, are placed in the situation of jurors, and judges, conjointly. They are to elicit the facts from the evidence, as jurors would do, and they are to judge of the law arising out of those facts in the common course, if they think fit. Out of this position arise two conclusions: viz. first, that they are not compellable to grant a special case, if they entertain no doubt (a) whatever of the law: and therefore, though it is certainly, in point of candour, right to comply with the request of the litigant parties by doing so, where any reasonable doubt on the subject is suggested, they will best consult the interests of the public by refusing it where they believe the application to arise out of mere obstinacy, or a spirit of litigation; and should always refuse it, unless they entertain serious doubts. Per Bayley J., in the King v. Burbach, 1 M. & S. 376. Secondly, that their authority to judge of the law is the only one which in these cases they reserve for the superior court; whence it follows, that the facts make no part of the subject-matter on which the court above are to exercise their discretion, and therefore, having been found by the justices, they must be specifically stated in the case, and not the evidence from which they were deduced. Burr. 120. S. C. A very few examples may suffice for illustration. On an appeal respecting a pauper's settlement, where the question depends on an equivocal hiring, or a doubtful service for a year, the fact is to be deduced from the evidence, such as it may be, one way or the other, by the justices; and not the evidence, from which they draw their conclusion, stated. R. v. Hobbear, 1 E. R. 73. So, whether a master gave a particular consent to his apprentice to serve a third person, is a matter of fact, which, let it rest on testimony ever so ambiguous, must be found, and not left doubtful on the face of the statement. Burr. 682. S. C. So, in a question of settlement by residing on an estate, the session must state the interest which the pauper took, whether he came in by descent or by purchase; and if the latter, the price of such purchase, that it may appear on the face of the statement, that it was such a purchase as will confer a settlement. R. v. Warblington, T. R. 241.

SPECIAL CASE.

Fraud is a fact. This, therefore, like all other matters of fact, if it make any part of the case, to influence the opinion of the justices, must be specifically found by them, and stated accordingly; for it is not enough to state such evidence, though clearly leading to the most palpable conclusion of fraud, for the court above to draw such conclusion. Per Buller, J., in the King v. Fillongley, 1 T. R. 461. In some cases, the evidence and the conclusion have both been stated, to which there is no objection in point of form; but it leads to an obvious inconvenience in point of practice, that if the court above should differ from the sessions as to the conclusion, they could not regularly interfere; and that, in appearance, an opinion is asked, which the court cannot judicially give. Burr. S. C. 57, 171; Talf. Dick. Sess. 627.

Fraud.

Facts must be
and stated.

If the special case be insufficient, the court will send it back to be restated, upon which the sessions should proceed as if it were an entirely new business; for it is in the nature of a new trial: wherefore they have no right to take any notice of what passed before. R. v. Page, 2 Bott, 743.

Insufficient case
proceedings on.

When the case, however, is only sent back to ascertain some particular fact, the proof may be confined to that, and it may be amended by new evidence. R. v. Hitcham, Burr. S. C. 489.

Or the case may be sent back to explain some ambiguity of expression, or omission of an inference, which the justices may supply without hearing witnesses; for the sessions, in order to re-state a case, are not necessarily obliged to hear new evidence. R. v. Bray, 2 Bott, 743; Burr. S. C. 684.

But the court will not send a case down to the sessions to be re-stated on a mere formal objection, if enough appear to enable them to decide according to the merits of the case, and when the only possible result of sending back the case would be to produce delay and expense. R. v. Inh. of Middlesox, 2 T. R. 41.

Nor on the affidavit of a person that the clerk of the peace did not state his evidence truly. R. v. Burgh, 2 Bott, 747.

The sessions cannot be compelled to state a special case. Nor will the court permit them to raise a general question, by omitting to state particular circumstances belonging to the case. But if the sessions order a special case to be made, and before it is settled the sessions is inadvertently adjourned, the court of King's Bench will grant a mandamus to compel them to proceed in the appeal. R. v. Oulton, 2 Bott, 73; R. v. Francis Hill, 1 Bott, 280; R. v. Justs. of Sussex, 2 Bott, 751.

a case.

If a session be adjourned pending the settlement of a special case, the court will grant a mandamus commanding the sessions to complete the case. R. v. Justs. of Sussex, 2 Bott, 751.

Adjournment of

If the justices at sessions are equally divided, and no order be made, nor the sessions adjourned, no order can be made at a subsequent sessions. Bodmin v. Warligné, 2 Bro. P. C. 733.

which are not to state the evidence of the fact, but the fact itself. R. v. Martley, Burr. S. C. 120; 2 Bott, 741.

The court ordered the sessions to inquire into a fact which appeared doubtful on the original order of removal, even though the sessions stated no case for the opinion of the court. R. v. Margam, 1 T. R. 775.

What to be stated in a settlement case.

The sessions should state, as a fact (in a settlement case), whether the master dispensed with the service before the end of the year, or whether there were a dissolution of the contract by mutual consent. R. v. St. Peter, Norwich, 8 T. R. 477.

Special cases may be granted on convictions, &c.

Special cases are most usually granted in cases of settlement and rating. They may, however, be granted in all cases of orders and convictions, where the certiorari is not taken away by statute. The King v. Allen, 15 East's R. 333.

But the Court of King's Bench will take no cognizance of a special case reversed on an indictment at sessions. The King v. the Inhabitants of Salop, 13 East's R. 95.

K. B. will not consider more than the question put.

Where one question alone is submitted to the Court of King's Bench by the sessions, that court will not consider any other questions. R. v. Guildford, 2 Chit. 284.

V. Of Adjournment, Fees, and Estreats.

Adjournment of the sessions.

Where the sessions is adjourned, the style of the sessions ought not to run at such a sessions held by adjournment; but the original meeting of the sessions ought to be set forth, and that it was continued from thence to such further time by adjournment. 2 Str. 823, 865. See also R. v. Walker, 2 Sess. Ca. 21.

But such adjournment ought not to be beyond the time of meeting of the next quarter sessions, as in the case of R. v. Grince, T., 4 Geo. I. An indictment was found before the justices for the county of Lincoln, against a constable, for refusing to obey an order of the justices; and the defendant was tried, convicted, and had judgment given against him, at a general sessions, held the 3rd day of May (which was after the Easter sessions began), by the adjournment of the Epiphany sessions; but, by the Court of King's Bench, the judgment was reversed, because the justices cannot continue one general sessions to a day subsequent to the time appointed by the 2 Hen. V. c. 4, for the holding another original sessions. 19 Vin. Abr. 358.

The adjournment of a sessions must be made by the same number of justices as are necessary to hold it. R. v. Westington, 2 Bott, 733.

Wages of the justices and estreats.

By the 12 Rich. II. c. 10, the justices shall take for their wages 4s. the day for the time of their sessions, and their clerk 2s., of the fines and amerciaments arising and coming of the same sessions, by the hands of the sheriffs. And the lords of franchise shall be contributory to the said wages, after the rate of their part of fines and amerciaments. See Justices, Vol. III. p. 473.

But by the 14 Rich. II. c. 11, no duke, earl, baron, or baronet, shall take any wages.

And the estreats of the justices shall be doubled, and the one part delivered by them to the sheriff, to levy the money thereof rising, and thereof to pay the justices their wages by the hand of the sheriff, by indenture betwixt them thereof to be made.

Fees in sessions.

The fees in sessions for traversing, trying, or discharging indictments, discharging recognizances of the peace and good behaviour, and the like, do vary according to the custom of the country; and, in that case, the custom of the place is to be observed. Dalt. c. 41. See title Clerk of the Peace, Vol. I.

By Holt, C. J., the court cannot commit for non-payment of fees; for, if there be right, there is remedy; and indebitatus assumpsit will lie, if the fee be certain; if uncertain, quantum meruit. 2 Ld. Raym. 703.

Sessions, Petty and Special.

Petit session, when necessary.

When expedient.

Special session, what.

Differs from petty session.

A PETTY or petit session is a meeting of two or more justices of the peace, holden of their own mere motion, for the execution of some power vested in them by law. There are some occasions on which, though a single magistrate may proceed, it is advisable and usual to procure the attendance of two or more. With respect to the cases in which one magistrate may act, but in which he should, in his discretion, seek the assistance of another, Mr. Talfourd observes, that it is obviously impossible to suggest any general rules. A magistrate will probably think it advisable to adopt the latter course, in cases which affect large pecuniary interests, which involve questions arising on statutes of difficult interpretation, and in all cases where any doubt may reasonably be expected, and where his decision would be final. Cases will also sometimes occur, in which, though not in themselves difficult, local circumstances may render the concurrence of two or more magistrates advisable, in order that justice may not only be fully and fairly, but satisfactorily administered. Talfourd's Dick. Sess. p. 6. See further as to when there must be two or more justices, ante, Justices, Vol. III. p. 466.

A special session is a meeting of justices, holden on a special occasion, for the execution of some particular branch of their authority, convened by reasonable notice to the other magistrates of the division. Per Bayley, J., R. v. Just. of Worcestershire, 2 B. & A. 233; 2 Haw. c. 8, 18.

It differs from a petty session, with which it has been sometimes confounded, in this important respect, that an opportunity must be afforded to the magistrates of the division in general to attend and participate in the proceedings, whereas the petty session may be holden by any two justices, on their mere private agreement, to transact such business as they are authorized to perform. Talf. Dick. Sess. 6.

By certain statutes, special sessions are required to be holden at particular periods. For instance, specific times are mentioned in the 48 Eliz. c. 2, and 54 Geo. III. c. 91, for appointing overseers of the poor; in 13 Geo. III. c. 78, and 55 Geo. III. c. 68, for appointing surveyors of the highways; in 37 Geo. III. c. 143, for appointing inspectors of weights and measures; and in 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, for licensing alehouses. (See respective titles.) The sessions, therefore, must in these cases be holden at the times named. There are others for which no particular time is or can be prescribed, and which may be convened whenever the occasion shall arise; as for diverting or stopping up highways, proceeding under the General Inclosure Act, and erecting a house of industry, &c.

PETTY AND SPECIAL.
Time of holding.

Where the manner of holding a special session is prescribed by the statute which directs it to be holden, the precise requisitions of the statute must, of course, be obeyed. Where no such direction is to be found, as in the great majority of instances, the special session may be convened at the instance of the custos rotulorum of the county; of the clerk of the peace or his deputy; or of two justices. The party or parties convening the session issue a precept to the chief constable, who thereupon issues precepts to the petty constables, and gives notice to all the magistrates usually acting within the district for which the session is convened. The precepts must express distinctly the purpose for which the session is to be holden; and of this purpose distinct notice must be given to the magistrates, more especially when the session is not one of those directed by statute to be periodically holden for specific purposes. Talf. Dick. Sess. 7.

Manner of holding.

The forms of these precepts vary, of course, with the occasion: a specimen of one for holding a special session relative to the state of highways, &c. will be found under title Highways, Vol. III. p. 98.

We have already seen that, to constitute a good special session, reasonable notice should be given to all the magistrates of the division; and, therefore, in the case of the King v. Justs. of Worcestershire, before mentioned, where a precept for holding a special session on the 15th of September, for diverting a way, was issued on the 12th, and the notices given on the 14th, the Court of King's Bench held that the session was not properly convened, and the order invalid.

Notice given to magistrates.

When the division within which the magistrates act is a hundred, the notices of holding a special sessions must be given by the high constable of the hundred. When they are justices of a corporation, the notices must be served by authority of the officer of the corporation analogous to the high constable. In the case of R. v. Justs. of Surry, the notice was served on the several magistrates of the division by the clerk of the magistrates, and not by the high constable; and the special session convened thereon was held bad. 5 B. & C. 241; 7 D. & R. 857; 4 D. & R. M. C. 8, S. C.

Notice given by high constable.

But the statute only requires that the notice shall be given by the high constable or other proper officer; it is not necessary that it should be actually served by him; and, therefore, in the case of R. v. Justs. of Suffolk, where notice, having been signed by the chief constable, was served by a person acting under his authority, it was held good, as though he had personally served it. R. v. Justs. of Suffolk, 6 B. & C. 110; 9 D. & R. 111, S. C.

Need not be actually served by him.

The place of holding a special session is in the discretion of those who have power to convene it, so that it is within their jurisdiction; but it must be distinctly specified in the precepts and notices. Dalt. 185, supra.

A special session cannot be holden by different sets of magistrates for the same purpose. And, therefore, where two sets of magistrates have concurrent jurisdictions, and one appoints a meeting to grant ale licences, their jurisdiction attaches so as to exclude the others appointing a subsequent meeting; but they may all meet together on the first day. But if, after such appointment, the other set of magistrates meet on a subsequent day, and grant other licences, their proceeding is illegal, and the subject of an indictment, even without evidence of corrupt motive. R. v. T. Sainsbury, Esq., and another, 4 T. R. 451.

Cannot be holden by different sets of magistrates for same purpose.

holding these sessions, and the statutes under which they are summoned, is referred to the different subjects, as arranged in titles through this work. The last act, 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, relating to the licensing and government of ale-houses, &c. is a very important one, so far as regards the directions contained therein for the holding an annual special session, and other special sessions auxiliary thereto, for the accomplishment of its purposes. It will be found under title Alehouse. Vol. I.

Sewers.

Statutes as to.

By the 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5, commissions of sewers shall be issued in all parts of the realm, where need shall require.

And by the 13 Eliz. c. 9, for one year after the expiration of a commission of sewers, the justices of the peace, or six of them (two of them being of the quorum), may execute the powers of the said commission, unless a new commission shall be issued in the meantime.

But as the power and authority of these commissioners of sewers is not general enough to fall in with the design of this book, those whom it may particularly concern are referred to the statutes at large which treat of this title; namely,

23 Hen. VIII. c. 5.

3 & 4 Edw. 6, c. 8.

25 Hen. VIII. c. 10.

7 Anne, c. 10.

Beside which general acts, there are others which concern the cities of London and Westminster only, and other places within the bills of mortality; to wit,

3 Jac. c. 14.

2 Wil. III. sess. 2, c. 8.

19 Car. II. c. 3, s. 20.

Costs of distresses for sewers' rates.

Provisions of recited act extended to distresses for taxes, rates, tithes, &c.

The 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 17, after reciting that it is expedient to extend the provisions of the 57 Geo. III. c. 93, (which is an act to limit the charges of brokers on distraining for rents not exceeding 20*l.*, ante, Distress, Vol. I.) "to distresses for other cases," enacts, "that from and after the passing of this act all the rules, regulations, clauses, provisions, penalties, matters, and things in the said act contained, shall extend and be construed to extend, and shall be applied and put in execution, so far as the same are applicable and capable of being put in execution, with respect to any distress or levy which shall be made for any land tax, assessed taxes, poor's rates, church rates, tithes, highways rates, sewer rates, or any other rates, taxes, impositions, or assessments whatever, in all cases where the sum demanded and due for or in respect of such taxes, rates, tithes, assessments, or impositions shall not exceed the sum of 20*l.*, and in all cases where the whole of the several sums sought to be levied by distresses taken for different purposes at the same time shall not exceed the sum of 20*l.*; and that such costs and charges, and no other, shall be taken and payable as the costs and charges of the levy and disposition of such distresses; and that all such proceedings shall and may be had and taken against any and every person transgressing the regulations of the said act in the levying or distraining for any such taxes, rates, impositions, or assessments, and all such persons shall be liable to and shall incur such and the like penalties, as by the said act are directed, required, and imposed with respect to persons making any distress for rent contrary to the directions of the said act; and that in any order or judgment of any justices before whom any complaint shall be preferred in consequence of this act, such order shall be expressed to be made upon a complaint for the breach of the said recited act, as amended by this act; and that the said recited act and this act shall be taken and construed together as one act, to all intents and purposes whatsoever."

SEWERS.

In indictments for offences committed on sewers, the property may be laid in the commissioners.

The 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 18, with respect to property under commissioners of sewers, enacts, "that in any indictment or information for any felony or misdemeanor committed on or with respect to any sewer or other matter within or under the view, cognizance, or management of any commissioners of sewers, it shall be sufficient to state any such property to belong to the commissioners of sewers within or under whose view, cognizance, or management any such things shall be, and it shall not be necessary to specify the names of any of such commissioners." See, ante, Indictment, Vol. III. p. 343.

The commissioners of sewers have jurisdiction over a sewer communicating with a navigable stream, or with the sea above the point where the tide ebbs and flows, if it be useful for navigation, and if the place over which the jurisdiction is, is likely to be benefited by it. Dore v. Gray, 2 T. R. 358.

Decisions as to sewers.

Sewer rates may be made to reimburse the charges of making such sewers. 2 Str. 1127.

If a sea-bank, or wall, which the owners of particular lands are bound to repair, be destroyed by tempest, without any default in such owners, the commissioners of sewers may order a new one (in a different form, if necessary) to be erected at the expense of the whole level. 8 T. R. 312.

The commission of sewers extends only to navigable streams, unless within two miles of London. Yevo v. Holland, 2 Bla. Rep. 717.

Where, in a large district, placed under one set of commissioners of sewers by the same commission, there were six separate lines of sewers, by which six several levels or divisions (into which the district was divided) were separately drained, and no one level derived benefit from the sewers in the others: held, that the commissioners ought to make a separate rate upon each level or division, for the maintenance of the sewers by which it was drained, and not one equal rate upon the whole district, for the maintenance of all the sewers within it. R. v. Commissioners for Tower Hamlets, 9 B. & C. 517.

The 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5, s. 17, having directed that "laws, acts, decrees, and ordinances," made by commissioners of sewers, shall stand good, and be put in execution so long time as their commission endureth, and no longer, except "the said laws and ordinances" be engrossed on parchment, and certified under the seals of the commissioners into Chancery, and have the royal assent; and the 13 Eliz. c. 9, having directed all commissions of sewers to continue in force for ten years, unless sooner determined by supersedes, or any new commission, and that all "laws, ordinances, and constitutions," made by force of such commission, being written in parchment, indented, and under seals, &c., shall, without such certificate or royal assent, continue in force, notwithstanding the determination of the commission by supersedes, until repealed or altered by new commissioners; and that all such "laws, ordinances, and constitutions," written in parchment, indented, and sealed, &c., shall, without certificate or royal assent, continue in force for one year after the expiration of such commission, by lapse of ten years from its teste: held, 1st, that the laws, acts, decrees, and ordinances, mentioned in the statute of Hen. VIII., mean the same as the laws, ordinances, and constitutions, mentioned in that of Elizabeth; and, 2ndly, that a decree made by commissioners, under a former commission, which had expired by lapse of ten years, directing a sea-wall to be re-founded, which had been destroyed by a violent tempest and inundation, and the sums necessary for its construction to be advanced by those who were before bound to sustain it ratione tenuræ (and who did advance the money accordingly), and that a rate should be made on the level for their reimbursement (although such decree had been written in parchment, indented, and sealed, which this was not), could not be enforced by commissioners under a new commission issued more than a year after the expiration of the former commission, as to so much of it as remained unexecuted, though good to the extent to which it had been executed; and therefore this court refused a mandamus to the new commissioners, to direct a rate to be levied on the level for the reimbursement, directed by the decree. R. v. Somerset (Commissioners of Sewers), 9 East, 109; 3 Smith, 105 S. C.

Where the owner of marsh lands was bound by the custom of a sewage level to repair the sea-walls abutting on his own land, and by an extraordinary flood-tide the wall was damaged, the court refused to grant a mandamus to the commissioners of sewers to reimburse him the expense of the repairs; it appearing, by affidavit, that the wall had been previously presented for being in bad repair, and was out of repair at the time the accident happened: nor can the other landowners in the level be called upon to contribute to the repairs of such a wall. R. v. Essex (Commissioners of Sewers), 2 D. & R. 700; 1 B. & C. 477. S. C.

The commissioners of sewers cannot maintain an action of trespass against the commissioners of a harbour, for breaking down a wall or dam erected by the former as such commissioners across a navigable river: as the authority to be exercised by them, on the behalf of the public, does not vest in them such a property or possessory interest as will enable them to maintain such action. Newcastle (Duke) v. Clark, 2 Moore, 666; 8 Taun. 602. S. C.

The commissioners of sewers cannot assess a person in respect of drains which communicate with other drains that fall into the great sewer, if the level of his drains be so much above the sewer that the stopping of the sewer could not possibly throw back the water so as to injure his premises, and if he be not, and it does not appear that he is likely to be, benefitted by the works done upon the sewer. Masters v. Scroggs, 3 M. & S. 447.

A tenement in the king's dock-yard, deriving a benefit from public sewers, and occupied by an officer of government who pays no rent, is still liable to be rated to the sewers. Netherton v. Ward, 3 B. & A. 21.

A decree by the commissioners of sewers is not conclusive against the party assessed for the payment of a rate, and who resides within the district over which they have jurisdiction; but such party may prove, in an action of trespass brought by him against one of the collectors of the rates, for taking his goods to satisfy such rate, that he derived no profit from the sewer in respect of which the assessment was made; and such evidence having been rejected at Nisi Prius, the Court of Common Pleas granted a new trial. Stafford v. Hamston, 5 Moore, 608; 2 B. & B. 691. S. C.

A local act of Parliament, enacting, that, for the better and more effectual execution of the act, all the lands, &c., within a certain district (previously within the jurisdiction of the general commissioners of sewers), and the works, drains, sewers, &c., thereof, should be subject only to the control, &c., and jurisdiction, of local commissions thereby appointed, and not to the control, direction, survey, or order, of any commissioners of sewers, does not discharge the inhabitants of the district from their liability to serve on juries at the sessions at sewers, without an express provision; nor will the Court of Exchequer discharge the estreats of fines imposed by the sessions, and levied on such inhabitants, for refusing to attend when summoned, and the mode of proceeding by which the question was brought under the consideration of the court was by a rule to show cause why the estreats should not be discharged, the commissioners of sewers having refused to join in framing an issue to enable the parties to try the question at law. Ex-parte Oust, 9 Price, 117.

Where bricklayers employed by the commissioners of sewers to repair a public sewer, performed the work in such a manner as to occasion a damage to a neighbouring house, held, that they were liable to an action, although the work itself appeared to be performed in a skilful manner. Jones v. Bird, 1 D. & R. 497; 5 B. & A. 837. S. C.

By the 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5, the jury by whom a presentment is made to commissioners of sewers, concerning what lands are within a level, and subject to a certain rate, ought to be summoned by the sheriff from the body of the county, in pursuance of a precept directed to him from the commissioners for that purpose. R. v. Somerset (Commissioners of Sewers), 7 East, 71; 3 Smith, 105. S. C.

And a presentment made by a standing jury, constituted according to ancient usage, originally returned by the sheriff at the commencement of every new commission of sewers from certain parishes or districts, composed of land-owners there interested in disclaiming the general charges of the level, which jurymen acted for life, unless removed for cause, and only the foreman of whom was summoned by the sheriff on the particular occasion, which foreman thereupon convened the other jurymen, is illegal and void, and the want of jurisdiction of such presenting jury cannot be waved by traversing their presentment, and going to trial before another jury properly returned from the body of the county by whom such presentment was confirmed. The presenting jury, after being sworn and charged, must also prosecute their inquiry, upon hearing evidence on oath before the commissioners in curia, and make their presentment thereon, and not upon information collected in pais, without oath. R. v. Somerset (Commissioners of Sewers), 7 East, 71; 3 Smith, 105, S. C.

By act of Parliament, empowering certain persons to make a floating harbour at Bristol, it was enacted, that it should and might be lawful for the directors of the Bristol Dock-Company, and they were thereby authorized and required, to make a common sewer in a certain direction, therein specified, and also to alter or re-construct all or any of the sewers of the said city, at the mouths thereof, so and in such manner that the sewers might be discharged considerably under the surface of the water in the floating harbour; and also to make such other alterations and amendments in the sewers of the said city as might or should be necessary, in consequence of the floating of the said harbour. The directors altered several of the sewers, so as to discharge them considerably under the surface of the water in the floating harbour; but the sewage there discharged was so offensive, as to be a nuisance to the neighbourhood: held, that, under the latter part of the clause set forth, the directors were authorized and required to make a new sewer, if necessary, to remove the nuisance. R. v. Bristol Dock-Company, 6 B. & C. 181.

The jury, who are summoned by the sheriff to make the presentment before commissioners of sewers, should come from the body of the county, and not from the district over which the commissioners have jurisdiction; and where the precept to the sheriff was to summon "good and lawful men of your county, and resident within the Tower Hamlets," that being the district over which the commissioners had jurisdiction, it was held bad, and a presentment made by that jury, and all the subsequent proceedings founded on it, were declared to be void. Birkett v. Crozier, 3 C. & P. 63; 1 M. & M. 119. S. C.

A jury impannelled to inquire and present at a court of commissioners of sewers, presented that A. was benefitted by the sewers, and he received a summons to show cause why he should not pay; he neglected to traverse the presentment, and a distress was levied for the amount of the rate: held that these facts were a justification in an action of trespass for taking the distress, as the presentment, if duly made and not traversed, justified the commissioners in issuing the warrant of distress. Warren v. Dir, 3 C. & P. 71, n.

The presentment need not contain the name of every person benefitted; if it find "all Fore Street" to be benefitted, that is enough to include every one having a house there; and every one so having a house might traverse such presentment, he stating in his traverse that his property is so situated, and that he is aggrieved by the presentment. Id.

The warrant of distress need not recite the presentment. Id.

The defendant is not entitled to recover his treble damages under the 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5, s. 12, in case of a verdict in his favour, or a nonsuit, unless he claims them on the record. Id.

Turning out
commons, &c.

By the 38 Geo. III. c. 65, s. 1, it is enacted, that "if any person or persons whosoever shall turn out, keep, or depasture, in or upon any forest, chase, wood, moor, marsh, heath, common, waste land, open field, or other undivided or uninclosed land, any sheep or lambs infected with such complaint or disorder called scab or mange, or shall wilfully and knowingly turn out, keep, or depasture, in or upon any such forest, chase, wood, moor, marsh, heath, common, waste land, open field, or other undivided or uninclosed land, any sheep or lamb which, at any time within the space of six calendar months immediately previous thereto, shall have been infected as aforesaid, every such person, on being thereof convicted on the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, or on his or her confession, before any one or more justice or justices of the peace for the county, district, or place, wherein such offence shall have been committed, shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 10*l.*, nor less than 20*s.*, for every such offence, together with all reasonable costs and charges attending such conviction, such costs and charges to be ascertained by the justice or justices before whom such conviction shall take place; and so toties quoties, as often as any such sheep or lamb shall be so turned out, kept, or depastured."

Sheep and lambs

Sect. 2. That "the owner or owners of each and every sheep and lamb of the age of three months, which shall be turned out, kept, or depastured, on any forest, chase, wood, moor, marsh, heath, common, waste land, open field, or other undivided or uninclosed land, shall cause such sheep and lambs to be marked with the initial letters of his, her, or their christian name and surname, or christian names and surnames, or with such marks with which such sheep or lambs have for three preceding years been usually marked, such letters or marks not being less in length than three inches; and in case of neglect thereof, the owner or owners shall, for each and every such sheep and lamb not so marked, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 2*s.*, and so toties quoties, as often as any such sheep or lamb not so marked shall have been so turned out, kept, or depastured."

Persons having
mons, &c., may complain to a

Sect. 3. "That, for the better and more effectually discovering the offenders, and punishing the offences herein mentioned, it shall and may be lawful to and for any person or persons having sheep or lambs actually depasturing, or entitled to be depastured, on such forest, chase, wood, moor, marsh, heath, common, waste land, open field, or other undivided or uninclosed land, who shall perceive, or have reasonable ground or foundation for believing, that there is or are any sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, depasturing or being in or upon the same, contrary to the direction and provisions of this act, to apply to any one or more justice or justices of the peace of the county, district, or place, wherein such lands severally do lie, who, upon complaint on oath made thereof before him or them, is and are hereby authorized and required to issue a warrant or warrants under his hand and seal, or their hands and seals, directed to the keeper or keepers of the said forests or chases, or his or their deputy or deputies, or to the petty constable or constables, bailiff, headborough, or tithingman of any parish, hamlet, or township, within or near which any such forest, chase, wood, moor, marsh, heath, common, waste land, open field, or other undivided or uninclosed land, shall lie and be situate, or unto any other person or persons, who shall consent and be willing to be inserted in such warrant or warrants, and shall command and empower him or them, or any of them, to take or drive all and every such sheep and lambs, sheep and lamb, to the next pound, or to some other convenient place, there to be examined by the person or persons who shall have made such application to such justice or justices as aforesaid, his, her, or their servant or agent, and by the person or persons to whom the said warrant shall be directed, any or either of them, notice being first given six hours at the least before such examination shall take place, by the person or persons making such complaint, or by his, her, or their servant or agent, to the owner or owners of such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, or unto his, her, or their hind, bailiff, or servant, or left at his, her, or their last or usual place of abode, if any or either of them be known, and do reside in the parish or parishes, hamlet or hamlets, township or townships, where such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, shall have been so found, describing the pound or place the same have been taken or driven to, in order that he, she, or they may, should he, she, or they judge proper, be present at such examination; and if, after such examination, it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the justice or justices granting such warrant or warrants, that such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, have or hath not been kept or depastured in or upon such lands and grounds, contrary to the directions and provisions of this act, then and in such case each and every such sheep and lamb shall be taken and driven back to the place or places from whence it was taken or driven previous to such examination, and such justice or justices shall award such costs, charges, and damages to the owner or owners thereof, as to him or them shall seem reasonable; and such costs, charges, and damages, shall be paid by the person or persons making such complaint, and shall be recovered in like manner as any forfeitures or penalties are by this act directed to be recovered."

If not found defective, to be returned to the place from which taken.

Sect. 4. "That if, upon any such examination, it shall appear to such justice or justices, that any such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, have or hath been turned out, kept, or depastured, in or upon any such lands or grounds, infected as aforesaid, or which at any time within the space of six calendar months immediately previous thereto shall have been infected as aforesaid, then and in such case the said justice or justices shall and may direct the same to be impounded, detained, and kept, and to be forthwith marked on both sides with the letter S (the length of such letter not being less than five inches), such marks to be made with pitch or tar, or some other adhesive material, such as sheep have been usually marked with in the neighbourhood, and shall also cause the left ear of each such sheep and lamb to be cut or slit in a horizontal line (such cut or slit not exceeding the length of one inch), and the same, when so marked, shall be delivered, upon demand, to the owner or owners thereof; and the costs, charges, and expenses attending the taking, driving, keeping, impounding, and marking of the same, having been ascertained by such justice or justices, shall be paid by the owner or owners of such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, together with the penalties and forfeitures imposed by this act, for each and every such sheep and lamb, and such costs, charges, and expenses shall be recovered in like manner as any penalties or forfeitures imposed by this act are directed to be recovered; and any such mark or marks, when made, shall be and be deemed evidence of the fact that such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, have been turned out, kept, or depastured, contrary to the directions and provisions of this act, without any other evidence whatsoever."

If found defective, to be marked, and delivered, on demand, to the owner.

Sect. 5. "That if any person or persons, at any time within the space of six calendar months after any such sheep or lambs shall have been so marked as directed by such justice or justices, shall cut out, alter, or destroy the mark herein directed to be made in the ear of any such sheep or lamb, or if the owner or owners of any such sheep or lamb shall not immediately renew or cause to be renewed, in like manner, the mark or marks herein directed to be made in the side or sides of every such sheep or lamb, when and as often as such mark or marks on the side or sides shall be defaced, altered, obliterated, or destroyed,

Sect. 6. "That if such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, so detained or impounded, shall not be demanded and taken away by the owner or owners thereof within five days after the same shall have been so marked as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful to and for any justice or justices of the peace of the county, district, or place, in which such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, shall have been so detained or impounded, by warrant under his or their hand and seal, or hands and seals, to direct the same to be sold, and the money arising by such sale, after deducting the costs, charges, and expenses of taking, driving, keeping, detaining, impounding, and marking the same, shall be paid to the overseer or overseers of the poor of the parish, hamlet, or place where such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, shall have been so detained or impounded; and in case the owner or owners of such sheep or lambs, sheep or lamb, shall not claim such money within twelve calendar months after such payment, the same shall be applied in aid of the poor-rate of such parish, hamlet, township, or place."

"That all penalties and forfeitures by this act imposed for any offence against the same, shall be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender or offenders, by warrant under the hand and seal of some justice of the peace for the county or place where the offence shall be committed, rendering the overplus of the money arising by such distress and sale (if any), upon demand, to the owner of such goods and chattels, after deducting the costs and charges of making such distress and sale; which warrant such justice is hereby empowered and required to grant, upon conviction of the offender or offenders, by confession or upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses; and one moiety of such penalties and forfeitures, when so levied, shall be paid to the informer, and the other moiety to the overseer or overseers of the parish or township where the offence shall be committed, to be applied by him or them in aid of the poor-rate."

Sect. 8. SHERIFF (shireve) in Saxon is scirgerefa, from sciran, to share or divide, for that the whole realm is parted and divided into shires; and gerefa, the comes, earl or governor, in the Belgic, called græf or grave. The word comes or count came first into Europe out of the eastern countries, and the word county, in

(a) The office and duties of a sheriff subject in this edition. See Watson on Sheriffs; Dalton's Sheriff; Impey's Sheriff; and Tidd's Practice, 9 ed., index, Sheriff.

SHERIFF.

Latin comitatus, seemeth to be nothing else but the division or allotment over which the comes or count had jurisdiction. And when the counts or earls left the custody of the counties, then was the custody thereof committed to the viscounts, or vicecomes (which is the Latin name for sheriffs); so called, because they supply the place of the comes or earl. The earl was otherwise called by the Saxons, eorl, ealdor, ealdorman (elder or alderman), because they were usually men of age and experience; by a like derivation as that of senators among the Romans.

Qualification.

By four several statutes it is enacted that none shall be sheriff, except he have sufficient land within the shire to answer the king and his people, viz. 9 Edw. II. st. 2; 4 Edw. III. c. 9; 5 Edw. III. c. 4; 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 21. See Watson's Sheriff, 4.

Who exempted.

In general, no man can be exempt from the office of sheriff but by act of Parliament, or letters patent. 9 Rep. 46.

By the Militia Act, 42 Geo. III. c. 90, s. 172, no person, being an officer of the militia, shall be compelled to serve the office of sheriff.

In the case of the mayor of Norwich v. Berry, 4 Burr. 2109, it was adjudged that an attorney is exempted from the office of sheriff of a corporation, by reason of his attendance on the courts at Westminster; and, though Lord Mansfield, C. J., distinguished this office in a corporation from that of the sheriff of a county, he seemed to think the privilege extended equally to the latter.

The payment of the fine fixed by the 9 Geo. I. c. 9, s. 3, to be discharged from serving the office of sheriff of Norwich, does not exempt the person paying it for more than one year, unless the corporation agree that he shall be discharged for a longer time. R. v. Woodrow, 2 T. R. 731; see, also, R. v. Bower, 1 B. & C. 585; 2 D. & R. 842, S. C.

How chosen.

At the common law, the sheriff was chosen by the county; but, by the 14 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 7, he shall be appointed yearly on the morrow of All Souls (since altered to the morrow of St. Martin), at the Exchequer, by the chancellor, treasurer, and chief baron, taking to them the chief justices.

Except in London, and where the office is a man's freehold or inheritance. 23 Hen. VI. c. 8.

By the 3 Geo. I. c. 15, s. 18, the sheriff (except in Wales and Chester), (a) at the entering upon his office, shall take the following oath (to be administered in pursuance of a writ of dedimus potestatem):—

Sheriff's oath of office.

"I, A. B., do swear, that I will well and truly serve the king's majesty in the office of sheriff of the county of _____, and promote his majesty's profit in all things that belong to my office, as far as I legally can or may; I will truly preserve the king's rights, and all that belongeth to the crown; I will not assent to decrease, lessen, or conceal the king's rights, or the rights of his franchises; and, whensoever I shall have knowledge that the rights of the crown are concealed or withdrawn, be it in lands, rents, franchises, suits, or services, or in any other matter or thing, I will do my utmost to make them be restored to the crown again; and if I may not do it myself, I will certify and inform the king thereof, or some of his judges. I will not respite or delay to levy the king's debts for any gift, promise, reward, or favour, where I may raise the same without great grievance to the debtors; I will do right, as well to poor as to rich, in all things belonging to my office; I will do no wrong to any man for any gift, reward, or promise, nor for favour or hatred; I will disturb no man's right, and will truly and faithfully acquit at the Exchequer all those of whom I shall receive any debts or duties belonging to the crown; I will take nothing whereby the king may lose, or whereby his right may be disturbed, injured, or delayed; I will truly return and truly serve all the king's writs according to the best of my skill and knowledge; I will take no bailiffs into my service but such as I will answer for, and will cause each of them to take such oaths as I do, in what belongeth to their business and occupation; I will truly set and return reasonable and due issues of them that be within my bailiwick, according to their estate and circumstances, and make due panels of persons able and sufficient, and not suspected or procured, as is appointed by the statutes of this realm; I have not sold or let to farm, nor contracted for, nor have I granted or promised for reward or benefit, nor will I sell or let to farm, nor contract for, or grant for reward or benefit, by myself or any other person for me, or for my use, directly or indirectly, my sheriffwick, or any bailiwick thereof, or any office belonging thereunto, or the profits of the same, to any person or persons whatsoever; I will truly and diligently execute the good laws and statutes of this realm; and, in all things, well and truly behave myself in my office, for the honour of the king and the good of his subjects, and discharge the same according to the best of my skill and power. So help me God."

SHERIFF.

The Court of King's Bench granted an information against a person refusing to take on him the office of sheriff, because the vacancy of the office occasioned a stop to public justice; and the year would be nearly expired before an indictment could be brought. R. v. Woodrow, 2 T. R. 781.

Refusing to take office.

By the 4 Hen. IV. c. 5, the sheriff in person shall continue within his bailiwick, and shall not let it to farm.

Sheriff selling inferior offices.

And by the 3 Geo. I. c. 15, s. 10, none shall buy, sell, let, or take to farm the office of under-sheriff, gaoler, bailiff, or other office, pertaining to the office of high sheriff, on pain of 500*l.*, half to the king, and half to him that shall sue (in two years). See, further, Office, Vol. III.

By the 1 Hen. V. c. 4, no under-sheriff, sheriff's clerk, receiver, nor sheriff's bailiff, shall be attorney in the king's courts, during the time that he is in office with any sheriff.

Sheriff's officers not to be attorneys, or jurors.

By the 3 Geo. I. c. 15, s. 11, the under-sheriff shall be appointed by the high sheriff, because he shall answer for him; and, by sect. 19, he shall take the like oath as the high sheriff, mutatis mutandis.

Appointment of the under sheriff.

The sheriff is answerable for the official acts of his under-sheriff. 1 Doug. 43, n.

An under-sheriff cannot refuse to execute process, till he has his fees. Heskett's case, 1 Salk. 330.

Appointment of bailiffs.

An inquisition, taken before two under-sheriffs extraordinary, was set aside: for the high-sheriff can appoint only one under-sheriff extraordinary. 2 Wils. 378.

The bailiffs, also, shall be appointed by him for the like reason; and every bailiff, when he gives security, upon entering into his office, shall make it part of the condition of such security that he will deliver a copy of the clauses in the 32 Geo. II. c. 28, concerning the carrying of prisoners for debt to alehouses (which is inserted more at large in Vol. II. title Gaols, &c. Sect. XVIII).

And by the 27 Eliz. c. 12, s. 2, such bailiff, or other person returning juries, or intermeddling with processes, shall take the following oath of office, before a judge of assize, or the custos rotulorum, or two justices of the peace (one of them being of the quorum):

"I, A. B., shall not use or exercise the office of bailiff corruptly during the time that I shall remain therein; neither shall nor will accept, receive, or take, by any colour, means, or device whatsoever, or consent to the taking of any manner of fee or reward of any person or persons, for the impanelling or returning of any inquest, jury, or tales, in any court of record, for the king, or betwixt party and party, above 2*s.*, or the value thereof, or such fees as are allowed and appointed for the same by the laws and statutes of this realm; but will, according to my power, truly and indifferently, with convenient speed, impanel all jurors, and return all such writ or writs touching the same as shall appertain to be done by my duty or office, during the time that I shall remain in the said office. So help me God."

Bailiff's oath.

Sect. 4, 6. Persons acting before they have taken the said oath shall forfeit 40*l.*; half to the king, and half to him that shall sue in the sessions, or other court of record.

Sect. 5. If they commit any act contrary to their said oath, they shall forfeit (in like manner), to the party grieved, his treble damages.

And the sheriff's bailiffs shall not be in the same office in three years after; 1 Hen. V. c. 4, except in London, Middlesex, Durham, Westmoreland, and towns being counties of themselves. 3 Geo. I. c. 15, s. 21.

The sheriff and bailiff are not both answerable in an action for a penalty for the same act. 2 T. R. 712.

But, after verdicts in both actions, the court will stay proceedings in both, on paying one penalty, and the costs in one action. 2 T. R. 712.

Liability of sheriff for bailiff's acts.

It seems that an action may be maintained against the sheriff for the penalty given by the 29 Eliz. c. 4, for the acts of his bailiff. 2 T. R. 155, et seq.

But all actions for breach of duty of the office of sheriff must be brought against the high-sheriff, though in consequence of the default of the under-sheriff or bailiff. Cameron v. Reynolds, 1 Cowp. 403.

Extortion.

An indictment lies against a sheriff for extortion. See Extortion, Vol. II.

Courts of sheriff.

The sheriff hath a jurisdiction both in criminal and civil cases; and for this purpose he hath two courts, his tourn for criminal causes, which is therefore the king's court; the other in his county court for civil causes, and this is the court of the sheriff himself. 3 Salk. 322. See Tourn, post.

A sheriff has no authority to order a freeholder into custody, and to take him before a magistrate, if he interrupt the proceedings at a county court, held for the election of knights of the shire, by making a noise and disturbance. Spilsbury v. Micklethwaite, 1 Taun. 146.

Accounts of his predecessor.

The new sheriff being appointed and sworn, he ought, at or before the next county court, to deliver a writ of discharge to the old sheriff, who is to set over all the prisoners in the gaol severally, by their names (together with all the writs), precisely, by view and indenture between the two sheriffs; wherein must be comprehended all the actions which the old sheriff hath against every prisoner, though the executions are of record. And, till the delivery of the prisoners to the new sheriff, they remain in the custody of the old sheriff, notwithstanding the letters patent of appointment, the writ of discharge, and the writ of delivery. Neither is the new sheriff obliged to receive the prisoners, but at the gaol only. But the office of the old sheriff ceases, when the writ of discharge cometh to him. Wood's Inst. b. 1, c. 7.

Sheriff to turn over unexecuted process to successor.

By the 20 Geo. II. c. 37, the old sheriff shall turn over to his successor, by indenture and schedule, all such writs and process as shall remain unexecuted; and the new sheriff shall execute and return the same.

Also prisoners.

When a sheriff quits his office, the custody of the county gaol can only belong to his successor. The county gaol is the prison for malefactors, and the sheriff ought to keep them there; but prisoners for debt, &c. where escape lies against the sheriff for their escape, may be kept in what place the sheriff pleases. 1 Ld. Raym. 136.

Sheriff, how far amenable to the justices of the peace.

The sheriff, having a justice of the peace's warrant directed to him, shall execute the same; but he need not go in person to execute it, but may authorize another to do it. 2 Haw. c. 13, s. 29.

And it is no excuse to the sheriff to return that he could not execute a precept because of resistance; for he may take with him the power of the county. 13 Ed. 1, st. 1, c. 39.

Also, the sheriff, on summons, is bound to attend the sessions of the peace, there to return his precepts, to take the charge of the prisoners, to receive fines for the king, and the like. 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 45.

And it seems clear, from the general reason of the law, which gives all courts of record a kind of discretionary power over all abuses by their own officers, that the sheriff is punishable by the justices in sessions for defaults in executing their writs and precepts. 2 Haw. c. 22, s. 2.

Taking recognizances.

In the case of Bengough and another v. Rossiter, 4 T. R. 505, it was determined that a sheriff has no authority to take a bond for the appearance of persons arrested by him, under process issuing upon an indictment at the quarter sessions for a misdemeanor: he can only take a recognizance for their appearance.

Sheriff a conservator of the peace, but not to act as justice.

Every sheriff is a principal conservator of the peace, by the common law, and may, ex officio, award process of the peace and take surety for it: and it seems to be the better opinion, that the security so taken by him is, by the common law, looked on as a recognizance, or matter of record, and not as a common obligation. 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 4.

But by 1 Mar. Sess. 2, c. 8, no sheriff shall exercise the office of a justice of the peace in any county wherein he is sheriff; and, in such case, his acts as a justice shall be void.

Sheriff to have the keeping of gaols.

By the 14 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 10, and 19 Hen. 7, c. 10, the sheriff shall have the keeping of gaols. See Gaols, Vol. II.

And in all civil causes, as in cases of imprisonment for debt, the sheriff or gaoler (at the election of the party) shall be answerable for escapes suffered by the gaoler; but if the gaoler suffer a felon voluntarily to escape, this, inasmuch as it reacheth to life, is felony only in the gaoler; but the sheriff may be indicted, fined, and imprisoned. 1 Hale, 597.

Where the sheriff levies money on a fieri facias, the plaintiff may have an action of debt against him for the money, because it was received by him to the plaintiff's use, and the defendant is discharged of it; and it lies against his executors, if he die. 3 Salk. 323.

The manner of passing his accounts is directed at large by the 3 Geo. I. c. 15 and 16, which being foreign to our purpose, are not here inserted.

By the 14 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 7, and the 28 Edw. III. c. 7, no sheriff shall continue in his office above one year, except in London, Middlesex, and towns being counties of themselves, and where the office is a man's freehold or inheritance. See the 23 Hen. VI. c. 8; 3 Geo. I. c. 15, s. 21.

And by the 1 Rich. II. c. 11, none that hath been sheriff shall be so again within three years, if there be other sufficient.

But by the 17 Edw. IV. c. 6, the sheriff may hold his office after the year, during Michaelmas and Hilary terms, if not before lawfully discharged.

By the 3 Geo. I. c. 15, s. 8, if the sheriff shall die before his office shall be expired, the under-sheriff shall execute the same in the deceased sheriff's name, till a new sheriff be sworn, and be answerable for the execution thereof, as the deceased sheriff would have been.

The sheriff's duty, before and at the assizes, consists in, 1st, proclaiming the assize; 2ndly, summoning the different juries: viz. the grand jury, nisi prius jury, crown jury, and also the special juries, if any, and granting views; see Jurors, Vol. III.; 3rdly, making his return to the assize precepts; 4thly, making and delivering a list of the prisoners to the judges, attending the judges, and providing them lodgings, &c.

The sheriff makes the required proclamation, by inserting an advertisement in the county newspapers. In some counties this is done by placarding printed proclamations in the principal towns and villages throughout the country. Watson's Sheriff, 276.

The sheriff, as well as his under-sheriff, must be in constant attendance on the judges during the whole of the assizes, and should provide the judges with lodgings, according to the custom of the particular county.

The sheriff should also go in state to meet the judges at the accustomed place, before they enter the town.

These, and other such ceremonies, vary in different counties, and the under-sheriff may readily inform himself of what attention he should pay the judges.

The under-sheriff has a great many payments to make, to the criers, to the attendants of the judges, to his javelin-men, &c. &c.; these are also regulated by custom.

For payments for the judges' lodgings, and other payments, as rewards, &c. he should take receipts, and these will be allowed him in his accounts. See Assizes, Vol. I.; Stirz-Mall, p. 525.

In case of any person being condemned to death, and left for execution, the under-sheriff should attend, and also collect his constables, bailiffs, and all the disposable civil force he can command, to attend the execution. See Watson's Sheriff, 278.

The sheriff's duty, before and at sessions, chiefly consists in proclaiming the sessions, in returning the grand jury, and giving notice to all stewards, constables, bailiffs of hundreds and liberties, and other officers.

He is bound to provide and make ready a fit and decent place for holding the sessions, unless where this duty is otherwise repealed by statute. Dalt. J. 372.

He should attend the sessions by himself or his deputy, on summons, to return his precepts, receive fines for the king, and take charge of prisoners; and if he neglect to do so, he may be fined by the court. Dick. Sess. 50.

The under-sheriff, at the sessions, receives all fines paid there.

He is also to pay the justices of the peace their wages, viz. 4s. per diem, and

Sect. 12. "That if any person shall knowingly and wilfully, and with intent to defraud and injure the true owner or owners thereof, or any person interested therein as aforesaid, purchase or receive any anchors, cables, or goods, or merchandize which may have been taken up, weighed, swept for, or taken possession of, whether the same shall have belonged to any ship or vessel in distress or otherwise, or whether the same shall have been preserved from any wreck, if the directions hereinbefore contained with regard to such articles shall not have been previously complied with, such person or persons shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of receiving stolen goods, knowing the same to be stolen, as if the same had been stolen on shore, and suffer the like punishment as for a misdemeanor at the common law, or be liable to be transported for seven years, at the discretion of the court before which he, she, or they shall be tried."

By sect. 15, persons carrying anchors and cables abroad may be transported. The 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 76, enacts similar provisions for the Cinque Ports.

III. c. 28, s. 13, it is enacted, "that if any person or persons shall cut, damage, or spoil, any cordage, cable, buoys, buoy-rope, head-fast, or other fast, fixed to any anchor or moorings belonging to any ship or vessel at anchor or moorings in the river Thames, or any rope used for the purpose of mooring or rafting masts or timber, or shall be aiding or assisting therein, with an intent to steal the same; such person or persons shall, being convicted thereof on the oath of two or more credible witnesses, be transported to some of his majesty's plantations in America for the space of seven years, according to the laws now in force for the transportation of felons."

(As to clergy being abolished, see Clergy, Benefit of, Vol. I.)

Sect. 2. "That any person who shall commit any of the offences beforementioned, in any place out of this realm, may be indicted and tried for the same, either in any shire or county within this realm, in like manner and form as if such offence had been committed within the said shire or county, or in such island, country, or place, where such offence shall have been actually committed, as his majesty, his heirs, or successors, may deem most expedient for bringing such offender to justice; any law, usage, or custom notwithstanding."

V. Preventing Seamen Working, &c.

By the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 26, any person preventing seamen by force from working in the ship, &c., may be punished before two magistrates with imprisonment not exceeding three months. See this enactment and law fully noticed, Assault, Vol. I. p. 282; ante, Seamen, p. 350.

VI. Masters Detaining Certificate, Registry, &c.

The 6 Geo. IV. c. 110, is the last act relative to the registering of British vessels, the 4 Geo. IV. c. 84, being repealed by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 105.

Offences as to registry, &c.

By the 27th section of the 6 Geo. IV. c. 110, after reciting that "it is not proper that any person under any pretence whatever should detain the certificate of registry of any ship or vessel, or hold the same for any purpose other than the lawful use and navigation of the ship or vessel for which it was granted;" it is enacted, "that in case the master of any ship or vessel, or any other person, who shall have received or obtained by any means or for any purpose whatever the certificate of the registry thereof (whether such master or other person shall be a part owner or not), shall wilfully detain and refuse to deliver up the same to the proper officers of his majesty's customs, for the purposes of such ship or vessel, as occasion shall require, it may and shall be lawful to and for any owner or owners of such ship or vessel, the certificate of registry of which shall be detained and refused to be delivered up as aforesaid, to make complaint on oath against the master of the ship or vessel, or other person, who shall so detain and refuse to deliver up the same, of such detainer and refusal, to any justice of the peace residing near to the place where such detainer and refusal shall be, in Great Britain or Ireland, or to any member of the supreme court of justice, or any justice of the peace in the islands of Jersey, Guernsey, or Man, or in any colony, plantation, island, or territory to his majesty belonging, in Asia, Africa, or America, or Malta, Gibraltar, or Heligoland, where such detainer and refusal shall be in any of the places last mentioned; and on such complaint the said justice or other magistrate shall and is hereby required, by warrant under his hand and seal, to cause such master or other person to be brought before him to be examined touching such detainer and refusal; and if it shall appear to the said justice or other magistrate, on examination of the master or other person, or otherwise, that the said certificate of registry is not lost or mislaid, but is wilfully detained by the said master or other person, such master or other person shall be thereof convicted, and shall forfeit and pay the sum of 100/., and on failure of payment thereof he shall be committed to the common gaol, there to remain without bail or mainprize for such time as the said justice or other magistrate shall in his discretion deem proper, not being less than three months nor more than twelve months; and the said justice or other magistrate shall and he is hereby required to certify the aforesaid detainer, refusal, and conviction, to the person or persons who granted such certificate of registry for such ship or vessel, who shall, on the terms and conditions of law being complied with, make registry of such ship or vessel de now, and grant a certificate thereof conformably to law, notifying on the back of such certificate the ground upon which the ship or vessel was so registered de novo; and if such master or other person who shall have detained and refused to deliver up such certificate of registry as aforesaid, or shall be verily believed to have detained the same, shall have absconded, so that the said warrant of the justice or other magistrate cannot be executed upon him, and proof thereof shall be made to the satisfaction of the commissioners of his majesty's customs, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to permit such ship or vessel to be registered de novo, or otherwise, in their discretion, to grant a license for the present use of such ship or vessel, in like manner as is hereinbefore provided in the case wherein the certificate of registry is lost or mislaid.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 56, s. 20, after reciting, "that whereas if any person shall wilfully detain the certificate of registry of any ship or vessel, and refuse to deliver up the same to the proper officer of the customs, for the purposes of such ship or vessel, as occasion shall require, such person may be proceeded against in manner provided by the said last-mentioned act; and doubts have arisen whether such proceedings may be had, unless the certificate of registry shall have been first demanded of such person by the proper officer of the customs; and it is expedient to remove such doubts;" it is enacted, "that it shall be lawful for the justice, or other person having jurisdiction in the matter, and he is hereby required, to receive proof on oath from the person making complaint to him of such detainer and refusal, that such occasion has arisen, although the certificates shall not have been demanded by any officer of the customs; and the indorsing of any transfer of property, or of the name of any new master, upon the certificate of registry, by the officers of the customs, shall be deemed to be purposes for which there is occasion to deliver the certificate of registry to the officers of the customs; and if any person who is not in actual possession of a ship or vessel shall detain the certificate of registry of such ship or vessel, from some person who is in actual possession of such ship or vessel as ostensible owner thereof, or who has the actual charge or command of such ship or vessel as ostensible master thereof, then and in such case occasion shall be deemed to have arisen for delivering of such certificate to the officers of the customs at the port where such ship shall then be, in order that such certificate may be given to some person who is in actual possession of such ship or vessel as such ostensible owner or master."

In Boven v. Fox, 10 B. & C. 41, it was made a question, but not decided, whether a person holding the certificate of a ship's register, which had been deposited as a security for advances for the use of a ship, and refusing to deliver it up when demanded, is guilty of a wilful detention within the meaning of the now repealed act, 4 Geo. IV. c. 41, s. 25.

By the 49th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 110, it is enacted, "that if any person or persons shall falsely make oath to any of the matters hereinbefore required to be so verified, such person or persons shall suffer the like pains and penalties as are incurred by persons committing wilful and corrupt perjury; and that if any person or persons shall counterfeit, erase, alter, or falsify any certificate or other instrument in writing, required or directed to be obtained, granted, or produced by this act, or shall knowingly or wilfully make use of any certificate or other instrument so counterfeited, erased, altered, or falsified, or shall wilfully grant such certificate or other instrument in writing, knowing it to be false, such person or persons shall for every such offence forfeit the sum of 500*l*."

VII. Regulations as to Passengers.

Passengers.

By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 105, the laws for regulating vessels carrying passengers from the United Kingdom to foreign parts out of Europe, and not within the Straits of Gibraltar, are repealed, and by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 116, other provisions are made in lieu thereof.

The 4 Geo. Slander.

[3 Edw. I. c. 34; 2 Rich. II. st. 1, c. 5; 12 Rich. II. c. 11.]

Written slander.
Verbal slander.

AS to written slander, see Libel, Vol. III.

As to what is verbal slander, and the civil remedies for the same and other laws relative thereto, see the Treatises by Mr. Starkie, Mr. Mence, and Mr. Holt. See also Schwyn's Nisi Prius, title, Slander, 3 Bla. Com. by Chitty, 123, &c., Roscoe on Evidence, p. 226.

I do not find it anywhere clearly settled how far slander or scandalous words become objects of the criminal jurisdiction, and so cognizable before justices of the peace, by reason of the different circumstances in matters of so intermediate a nature; for the same words, when spoken of different persons, and even of the same person, with a different emphasis and manner of delivering them, may receive a very different interpretation.

In general, it seemeth, that words which directly tend to a breach of the peace, as if one man challenge another, are cognizable before justices of the peace; for which the party may be bound to the good behaviour, and even indicted. 2 Salk. 628; 1 Keb. 931.

But if they do not tend directly to a breach of the king's peace, but are matters only of private slander between party and party, which no way affect the public administration of justice, as in case where the common people are wont to call one another knaves and rogues and whores and thieves, I do not find it asserted by any good authority that justices of the peace have any jurisdiction at all in such matters; but the proper remedy seems to be in one of these two ways, either by a prosecution in the spiritual court, or by an action upon the case at the common law. See Libel, Vol. III.

There is one species of slander, of which the law takes a more special notice; and that is, when it relates to the great men of the realm, concerning whom it is enacted, by the 3 Edw. I. c. 44, 2 Rich. II. st. 1, c. 5, and 12 Rich. II. c. 11, "that none shall tell or publish any false news or tales, whereby discord, or occasion of discord, or slander, may grow between the king and his people, or the great men of the realm; and that none shall devise, speak, or tell any false news or lies of any prelates, lords, judges, or other great men of the realm, whereof any discord or slander may arise; on pain of imprisonment, until he hath brought into court the first author of the tale; if he cannot find the author, he shall be punished by advice of council."

Publish any false News or Tales—But this extends only to extra-judicial slanders; for, if a man charge them in due course of law, although the charge be false, yet there will lie no action de scandalis magnatum, neither at common law nor by the statutes. 2 Inst. 228.

AS to evidence as regards stamps, see Vol. II. p. 61, 62.

Several provisions relative to the penalties of the stamp-acts will be found under the different titles of instruments which are subjected to stamp duties.

It being the intention of the legislature to repeal the present numerous and complicated enactments relative to the revenue of stamps, and to amend and consolidate the same, it would be idle and superfluous to present to the reader an elaborate treatise thereon. We will point out in chronological order only some of the enactments which are more frequently called into action than others.

In the first place, however, it should be noticed, that in one of the acts relating to these duties, viz. 10 Anne, c. 19, there is a clause which brings all the rest within the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace, and almost the whole law relating to this title; and is as follows:—

“That it shall and may be lawful to and for any two or more of the justices of the peace for the time being, residing near to the place where any pecuniary forfeitures, not exceeding 20*l.*, upon this or any of the acts of Parliament, touching any the duties under the management or care of the said commissioners for managing her majesty's duties on stamped vellum, parchment, and paper, shall be incurred, or any offence against any of the same acts shall be committed, in anywise relating to the same duties, or any of them, by which any sum of money only may be forfeited, to hear and determine the same; which said justices of the peace are hereby authorized and required, upon any information exhibited, or complaint made in that behalf, within one year after seizure made, or such offence committed, to summon the party accused, and also the witnesses on either side, and upon the appearance or contempt of the party accused,† shall be convicted of the offence alleged against him, and to award and issue out warrants under their hands and seals, for levying any pecuniary penalties so adjudged, on the goods of the offender, and to cause sale to be made thereof, in case they shall not be redeemed within six days, rendering to the party the overplus, if any; and if any party shall find himself aggrieved, or remain unsatisfied in the judgment of the said justices, then he or they shall or may, by virtue of this act, complain or appeal to the justices of the peace at the next general quarter sessions for that county, riding, or place, who are hereby empowered to summon and examine witnesses upon oath, and finally to hear and determine the same, and, in case of conviction, to issue warrants for levying the penalties, as aforesaid.” Sect. 172.

“That it shall and may be lawful to and for the said respective justices, where they shall see cause, to mitigate or lessen any such penalties, as they in their discretions shall think fit, the reasonable costs and charges of the officers and informers, as well in making the discovery, as in the prosecution of the same, being always allowed over and above such mitigation, and so as such mitigation do not reduce the penalties to less than double the duties over and above the said costs and charges; anything contained in this act or any other act of Parliament to the contrary notwithstanding." Sect. 173.

By the 26 Geo. III. c. 82, s. 1, it is enacted, that "whosoever any person shall be convicted before a justice or justices of the peace for any offence to be hereafter committed against any act or acts of Parliament now in being, or hereafter to be made, touching or concerning any the duties under the management or care of the said commissioners for managing the duties on stamped vellum, parchment, and paper, by which any pecuniary penalty or sum of money shall be forfeited, the said justice or justices of the peace before whom such person shall be convicted of the said offence, shall levy the said pecuniary penalty or sum of money in such manner as in such act or acts of Parliament is contained, and apply the same to such uses and purposes, and in such proportions, as are therein contained and expressly directed, in case the same act or acts of Parliament, or any other act or acts of Parliament relating thereto, shall expressly direct the application thereof; and in default of such express and sufficient directions in such act or acts of Parliament for the application of the said pecuniary penalty, or sum of money so forfeited upon such conviction as aforesaid, then to apply the same in such manner as is hereinafter directed."

Sect. 2. That "one moiety or half part of all pecuniary penalties or forfeitures which shall be incurred by any person or persons for any offence hereafter to be committed against any law now in being, or hereafter to be made, touching or concerning any the said duties (except where a different mode of application is or shall be in the said law specially prescribed), shall belong, and be applied to the informer or informers prosecuting for the same within the space of six calendar months after such offence is committed, and the other moiety or half part of the said pecuniary penalties or forfeitures (the necessary charges for the recovery thereof being first deducted) shall be paid to the use of his majesty, his heirs, and successors, in the manner hereinafter directed."

Sect. 3. "That every distribution or division of any pecuniary penalty or forfeiture, directed to be made by this or any other act or acts of Parliament touching any of the said duties, upon conviction before a justice or justices of the peace as aforesaid, shall be, and is hereby restricted and confined to the prosecuting for the same within the time hereinbefore limited; and that, in default of such prosecution within the time aforesaid, no informer or informers before a justice or justices of the peace as aforesaid, shall have or be entitled to any part or share of such penalty or forfeiture, but that the whole thereof shall belong to his majesty, his heirs, and successors, and shall be recoverable by any the ways and means in or by any such act or acts of Parliament in that behalf directed; anything in this, or any of the said acts, contained to the contrary notwithstanding."

Sect. 5. "That, from and after the passing of this act, in all cases where any pecuniary penalty or forfeiture for any offence committed against this, or any act or acts of Parliament now or hereafter to be made, touching any the duties under the management or care of the said commissioners for managing the duties on stamped vellum, parchment, and paper, shall be incurred, it shall and may be lawful for the justice or justices of the peace, before whom any person or persons shall be convicted of the said offence, to cause the conviction upon the same offence to be made out in the form or to the effect following, mutatis mutandis, as the case shall happen to be; any thing in any former act contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding; and every such conviction shall be good and effectual to all intents and purposes whatsoever, without stating the case, or the facts, or evidence, in any more particular manner; that is to say:

- And where any bond in England shall be given as a security for the performance of any covenant or agreement for the payment or transfer of any sum of money, or annuity, or any share in any of the stocks or funds before mentioned, such bond shall be charged with the same duty as if the same had been immediately given for the payment or transfer of such money, or annuity, or share of the said stocks or funds.
- And where in England any bond for the payment or transfer, or for the performance of any covenant for the payment or transfer of any sum of money or annuity, or any share in any of the stocks or funds before mentioned, shall be contained in one and the same deed or writing, with any other matter or thing, in this schedule specifically charged with any duty (except any declaration of trust of the money, annuity, stock, or fund secured), such deed or writing shall be charged with the same duties as such bond and other matter or thing would have been charged with, if contained in separate deeds.
- But where, in England, a bond for the performance of covenants or agreements (other than for the payment or transfer of any sum of money, or annuity, or any share in any of the said stocks or funds), shall be contained in the same deed or writing, with any other matter or thing, the same shall not be charged separately, but the whole shall be considered as one deed, and be charged accordingly, under its proper denomination.

Note—The purchase or consideration money is to be truly expressed and set forth in words at length, in or upon every such principal or only deed or instrument of conveyance.

And where any lands or other property, of different tenures or holdings, or held under different titles, contracted to be sold at one entire price for the whole, shall be conveyed to the purchaser in separate parts or parcels, by different deeds or instruments, the purchase or consideration money shall be divided and apportioned in such manner as the parties shall think fit, so that a distinct price or consideration for each separate part or parcel may be set forth in or upon the principal or only deed or instrument of conveyance relating thereto; which shall be charged with the said ad valorem duty in respect of the price or consideration money therein set forth.

And where any lands or other property, contracted to be purchased by two or more persons jointly, or by any person for himself and others, or wholly for others, at one entire price for the whole, shall be conveyed in parts or parcels, by separate deeds or instruments, to the persons for whom the same shall be purchased, for distinct parts or shares of the purchase money; the principal or only deed or instrument of conveyance, of each separate part or parcel, shall be charged with the said ad valorem duty, in respect of the sum of money therein specified as the consideration for the same.

But if separate parts or parcels of such lands or other property shall be conveyed to, or to the use of, or in trust for different persons, in and by one and the same deed or instrument, then such deed or instrument shall be charged with the said ad valorem duty, in respect of the aggregate amount of the purchase or consideration moneys therein mentioned to be paid or agreed to be paid, for the lands or property thereby conveyed.

And where any person, having contracted for the purchase of any lands or other property, but not having obtained a conveyance thereof, shall contract to sell to any other person, and the same shall in consequence be conveyed immediately to the sub-purchaser, the principal or only deed or instrument of conveyance shall be charged with the said ad valorem duty, in respect of the purchase or consideration money therein mentioned to be paid, or agreed to be paid by the sub-purchaser.

And where any person, having contracted for the purchase of any lands or other property, but not having obtained a conveyance thereof, shall contract to sell the whole or any part or parts thereof, to any other person or persons, and the same shall in consequence be conveyed, by the original seller, to different persons, in parts or parcels; the principal or only deed or instrument of conveyance, of each part or parcel thereof, shall be charged with the said ad valorem duty, in respect only of the purchase or consideration money which shall be therein mentioned to be paid or agreed to be paid for the same, by the person or persons to whom or to whose use or in trust for whom the conveyance shall be made, without regard to the amount of the original purchase-money.

- the purchase or consideration money paid or agreed to be paid by him, and shall be duly stamped accordingly; any deed or instrument of conveyance to be afterwards made to him, of the property in question, by the original seller, shall be exempted from the said ad valorem duty, and be charged only with the ordinary duty on deeds or instruments of the same kind not upon a sale.
- And where any lands or other property, separately contracted to be purchased of different persons, at separate and distinct prices; shall be conveyed to the purchaser, or as he shall direct, in and by one and the same deed or instrument; such deed or instrument shall be charged with the said ad valorem duty, in respect of the aggregate amount of the purchase or consideration moneys therein mentioned to be paid or agreed to be paid for the same.
- And where any lands, or other property, shall be sold and conveyed, in consideration, wholly or in part, of any sum of money charged thereon by way of mortgage, wadset, or otherwise, and then due and owing to the purchaser, or shall be sold and conveyed, subject to any mortgage, wadset, bond, or other debt, or to any gross or entire sum of money, to be afterwards paid by the purchaser, such sum of money or debt shall be deemed the purchase or consideration money, or part of the purchase or consideration money, as the case may be, in respect whereof the said ad valorem duty is to be paid.
- And to prevent doubts, respecting what shall be deemed the principal deed or instrument of conveyance, in certain cases, it is hereby declared:
- That where any lands or hereditaments, in England, shall be conveyed by bargain and sale enrolled, and also by lease and release, or feoffment, with or without any such letter or letters of attorney therein contained as aforesaid, the release or feoffment shall be deemed the principal deed; and the bargain and sale shall be charged only with the duty hereby imposed on deeds in general. (See Deed.) But the same shall not be enrolled or be available, unless also stamped for testifying the payment of the ad valorem duty on the release or feoffment.
- And where any lands or hereditaments shall be conveyed by lease and release, and also by feoffment, with or without any such letter or letters of attorney therein contained as aforesaid, the release shall be deemed the principal deed; and the feoffment shall be charged only with the duty hereby imposed on deeds in general. (See Deed.) But the same shall not be available, unless also stamped for testifying the payment of the ad valorem duty on the release.
- And where any copyhold or customary estate shall be conveyed, by a deed of bargain and sale, by the commissioners named in a commission of bankrupt, or by executors or others, by virtue of a power given by will, or by act of Parliament, or otherwise, where a surrender shall not be necessary, the deed of bargain and sale shall be deemed a principal instrument.
- And in other cases of copyhold or customary estates, the surrender or voluntary grant, or the memorandum thereof respectively, if made out of court, or the copy of court roll of the surrender or voluntary grant, if made in court, shall be deemed the principal instrument.
- And copies of court roll, made after the 31st day of August, 1815, of surrenders and voluntary grants made in court before or upon that day, and subsequent to the 10th day of October, 1808, shall be charged with the said ad valorem duties. But copies of court roll, of surrenders and voluntary grants made before or upon the 10th day of October, 1808, shall not be liable thereto.
- And grants, and copies of court roll of grants, of copyhold or customary estates for a life or lives, are to be charged, as well as those for any greater interest.

And where in Scotland there shall be a disposition or assignment, executed by the seller, and any other instrument or instruments, writing or writings, to complete the title, the disposition or assignment shall be deemed the principal instrument.

And where, upon the sale of any annuity or other right, not before in existence, the same shall not be created by actual grant or conveyance, but shall only be secured by bond, warrant of attorney, covenant, contract, or otherwise; the bond or other instrument, by which the same shall be secured, or some one of such instruments, if there be more than one, shall be deemed and taken to be liable to the same duty, as an actual grant or conveyance.

And in the case of leases or tacks, where a yearly rent of 20*l.* or upwards shall be reserved, as part of the consideration for the same, there shall be charged a further duty;—for which see title Lease.

And where the principal or only deed or instrument of conveyance, together with any schedule, receipt, or other matter, put or indorsed thereon, or annexed thereto, shall contain 2160 words or upwards, then for every entire quantity of 1080 words contained therein, over and above the first 1080 words, a further progressive duty of

And where there shall be several deeds, instruments, or writings, for completing the title to the property sold, such of them as are not liable to the said ad valorem duty shall be charged with the duty to which the same may be liable, under any general or particular description of such deeds, instruments, or writings contained in this schedule.

And where, in any case not hereby expressly provided for, of several deeds, instruments, or writings, a doubt shall arise which is the principal, it shall be lawful for the parties to determine for themselves which shall be so deemed, and to pay the said ad valorem duty thereon accordingly; and, if necessary, the other deeds, instruments, or writings, on which the doubt shall have arisen, shall be stamped with the particular stamp for denoting or testifying the payment of the ad valorem duty; upon all the deeds or instruments being produced, and appearing to be duly stamped in other respects.

And where there shall be duplicates of any deed or instrument, chargeable with the said ad valorem duty exceeding 2*l.*, one of them only shall be charged therewith, and the other or others shall be charged with the ordinary duty on deeds or instruments of the same kind not upon a sale; and on the whole being produced, duly stamped as hereby required, the latter shall also be stamped with a particular stamp for denoting or testifying the payment of the said ad valorem duty.

And where any deed or instrument, operating as a conveyance on the sale of any property, shall operate also as a conveyance of any other than the property sold by way of settlement, or for any other purpose, or shall also contain any other matter or thing besides what shall be incident to the sale and conveyance of the property sold, or relate to the title thereto; every such deed or instrument shall be charged, in addition to the duty to which it shall be liable as a conveyance on the sale of property, and to any progressive duty to which it may also be liable, with such further stamp duty as any separate deed, containing the other matter, would have been chargeable with, exclusive of the progressive duty.

Statutes.

Preliminary observations.

IT is said by the elegant and able writer of the Commentaries, Vol. I. p. 57, that the municipal law of England, or the rule of civil conduct prescribed to the inhabitants of this kingdom, may, with sufficient propriety, be divided into two kinds: viz. the lex non scripta, the unwritten or common law, and the lex scripta, the written or statute law.

Common law. (b)

COMMON LAW—The lex non scripta, or unwritten law, includes not only general customs, or the common law, properly so called, but also the particular customs of certain parts of the kingdom, and likewise those particular laws that are by custom observed only in certain courts and jurisdictions. It is not to be supposed, however, that this lex non scripta, or common law, is not evidenced by written documents; for a considerable portion of it is so. See 1 Bla. Com. 57, 58.

Three kinds of.

This unwritten or common law is distinguishable into three kinds: 1. General Customs, which are the universal rule of the whole kingdom, and form the common law, in its stricter and more usual signification. 2. Particular Customs, which, for the most part, affect only the inhabitants of particular districts. 3. Certain particular Laws, which by custom are adopted and used by some particular courts of petty, general, and exclusive jurisdiction. 1 Bla. Com. 67.

(1.) Common law or general customs.

1st. As to General Customs, or the Common Law, properly so called—This is that law by which proceedings and determinations in the king's ordinary courts of justice are guided and directed. Amongst other things, Blackstone observes, that this, for the most part, settles the solemnities and obligations of contracts; the rules of expounding wills, deeds, and acts of Parliament; the respective remedies of civil injuries; the several species of temporal offences, with the manner and degree of punishment; and an infinite number of minuter particulars, which diffuse themselves as extensively as the ordinary distribution of common justice requires. Thus, for example, amongst other things, that there shall be four superior courts of record—the Chancery, the King's Bench, the Common Pleas, and the Exchequer; that a deed is of no validity unless sealed and delivered; that breaking the peace is an offence, and punishable by fine and imprisonment, &c.

These customs and maxims are to be known, and their validity is to be determined, by the judges in the several courts of justice. They are the repositories of the law—the living oracles who must decide in all cases of doubt, and who are bound by an oath to decide according to the law of the land. 1 Bla. Com. 69.

The common law is as absolute as parliamentary law, and must be as rigidly observed.

(2.) Particular customs.

2d. As to Particular Customs or Laws which affect only the Inhabitants of Particular Districts—These are the remains of that multitude of local customs, out of which the common law, as it now stands, was collected at first by King Alfred, and afterwards by King Edgar and Edward the Confessor; each district mutually sacrificing some of its own special usages, in order that the whole kingdom might enjoy the benefit of one uniform and universal system of laws. But, for reasons that have been now long forgotten, particular counties, cities, towns, manors, and lordships, were very early indulged with the privilege of abiding by their own customs, in contradistinction to the rest of the nation at large; which privilege is confirmed to them by several acts of Parliament. Mag. Cart. 9 Hen. III. c. 9; 1 Edw. III. st. 2, c. 9; 14 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 1; 2 Hen. IV. c. 1; 1 Bla. Com. 74.

(a) As to the effect and proof in evidence of statutes, see Evidence, Vol. II. p. 36.

(b) The origin of the common law is said by Sir Matthew Hale (Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 55) to be as undiscoverable as the head of the Nile.

Such is the custom of gavelkind in Kent, and some other parts of the kingdom. Such is the custom that prevails in divers ancient boroughs, and therefore called borough-English, that the youngest son shall inherit the estate, in preference to all his elder brothers, &c. Such, also, are the special and particular customs of manors, of which every one has more or less, and which bind all the copyhold and customary tenants that hold of the said manors. Such, likewise, is the custom of holding divers inferior courts, with power of trying causes, in cities and trading towns, the right of holding which, when no royal grant can be shown, depends entirely upon immemorial and established usage. Such, lastly, are many particular customs within the city of London, with regard to trade, apprentices, widows, orphans, and a variety of other matters. All these are contrary to the general law of the land, and are good only by special usage; though the customs of London are also confirmed by act of Parliament. 8 Rep. 126; Cro. Car. 347.

COMMON LAW.

To this head may most properly be referred a particular system of customs used only among one set of the king's subjects, called the custom of merchants, or lex mercatoria; which, however different from the general rules of the common law, is yet ingrafted into it, and made a part of it, Winch. 24; being allowed, for the benefit of trade, to be of the utmost validity in all commercial transactions: for it is a maxim of law, that "cuiuslibet in sua arte credendum est."

Custom of merchants.

The rules relating to particular customs regard either the proof of their existence, their legality when proved, or their usual method of allowance.

If the custom be not a good custom, it ought to be no longer used: "malus usus abolendus est" is an established maxim of the law. To make a particular custom good, the following are necessary requisites:

What requisite to a good custom.

1. That it have been used so long, that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. (a) So that, if any one can show the beginning of it, it is no good custom. For which reason, no custom can prevail against an express act of Parliament; since the statute itself is a proof of a time when such a custom did not exist. Co. Lit. 114. A custom that every pound of butter sold in a certain market should weigh eighteen ounces, is bad, because it is directly contrary to the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 26; which directs that every pound throughout the kingdom shall contain sixteen ounces. See 3 T. R. 271. In which case, it seemed to be the opinion of the judges, that a custom to sell lumps of butter, containing eighteen or any other stated number of ounces, might be good and valid. The inconvenience arises from that which is every where called a pound being different in amount of weight in different parts of the kingdom, by which fraud and deception may be readily practised. Therefore, where a contract is made to sell specified goods by quantities of weight or measure, this must mean statute weight or measure. See 4 T. R. 314; 6 T. R. 338; 4 Taun. 102; 11 East, 300.

Beyond memory.

2. It must have been continued. Any interruption would cause a temporary ceasing: the revival gives it a new beginning, which will be within time of memory, and thereupon the custom will be void. But this must be understood with regard to an interruption of the right; for an interruption of the possession only, for ten or twenty years, will not destroy the custom. Co. Lit. 114. As, if the inhabitants of a parish have a customary right of watering their cattle at a certain pool, the custom is not destroyed though they do not use it for ten years; it only becomes more difficult to prove: but if the right be any how discontinued for a day, the custom is quite at an end.

Must have been uninterrupted.

3. It must have been peaceable, and acquiesced in; not subject to contention and dispute. Id. For, as customs owe their original to common consent, their being immemorially disputed, either at law or otherwise, is a proof that such consent was wanting. 1 Bla. Com. 77.

Immemorial acquiescence necessary.

4. Customs must be reasonable, Lit. s. 212, or, rather, taken negatively, Must not be unreasonable.

(a) The memory of man is taken in law to run to the beginning of the reign of Richard I.; consequently, if it can be shown that the custom commenced at any time since, or did not exist before, that period, it is invalid. But a regular usage for twenty years, unexplained and uncontradicted, is sufficient to warrant a jury in finding an immemorial custom. 2 B. & C. 54; 6 East, 214; 2 Saund. 175 a d; Peake's Evid. 336.

COMMON LAW.

they must not be unreasonable. Which is not always, as Sir Edward Coke says, 1 Inst. 62, to be understood of every unlearned man's reason, but of artificial and legal reason, warranted by authority of law. Upon which account, a custom may be good, though the particular reason of it cannot be assigned; for it sufficeth if no good legal reason can be assigned against it. Thus, a custom in a parish that no man shall put his beasts into the common till the 3d of October would be good; and yet it would be hard to show the reason why that day in particular is fixed upon, rather than the day before or after. But a custom that no cattle shall be put in till the lord of the manor has first put in his, is unreasonable, and therefore bad: for, peradventure, the lord will never put in his, and then the tenants will lose all their profits. Co. Copyhold, s. 33.

Or uncertain.

5. Customs ought to be certain. A custom, that lands shall descend to the most worthy of the owner's blood, is void; for how shall this worth be determined? but a custom to descend to the next male of the blood, exclusive of females, is certain, and therefore good. Roll. Ab. 565. A custom to pay 2d. an acre in lieu of tithes, is good; but to pay sometimes 2d. and sometimes 3d., as the occupier of the land pleases, is bad for its uncertainty. Yet a custom to pay a year's improved value for a fine on a copyhold estate, is good; though the value is a thing uncertain: for the value may at any time be ascertained; and the maxim of law is, id certum est quod certum reddi potest. A custom, that poor housekeepers shall carry away rotten wood in a chase is bad, being too vague and uncertain. 2 T. R. 758. A right to glean in the harvest cannot be claimed at common law; neither have the poor of a parish, legally settled, such right within the parish. 1 Hen. Bla. 51, 52. See ante, Cleaning. Vol. II. So is a custom for every inhabitant of an ancient messuage within a parish to take a profit a prendre in the land of an individual, bad. But such a right may be enjoyed by prescription or grant. 4 T. R. 717, 718; 2 Hen. Bla. 393; 1 Ld. Raym. 407; 1 Saun. 341, n. 3; 346, n. (3.)

Must be compulsory.

6. Customs, though established by consent, must be (when established) compulsory; and not left to the option of every man, whether he will use them or no. Therefore, a custom, that all the inhabitants shall be rated toward the maintenance of a bridge, will be good; but a custom, that every man is to contribute thereto at his own pleasure, is idle and absurd, and indeed no custom at all.

And consistent with each other.

7. Lastly, customs must be consistent with each other: one custom cannot be set up in opposition to another; for, if both are really customs, then both are of equal antiquity, and both established by mutual consent: which to say of contradictory customs is absurd. Therefore, if one man prescribes that by custom he has a right to have windows looking into another's garden, the other cannot claim a right by custom to stop up or obstruct those windows; for these two contradictory customs cannot both be good, nor both stand together. He ought rather to deny the existence of the former custom. 9 Rep. 58; 1 Bla. Com. 78.

Must be construed strictly.

Next, as to the allowance of special customs. Customs in derogation of the common law must be construed strictly. Thus, by the custom of gavelkind, an infant of fifteen years may, by one species of conveyance (called a deed of feoffment), convey away his lands in fee simple, or for ever. Yet this custom does not empower him to use any other conveyance, or even to lease them for seven years; for the custom must be strictly pursued. Co. Cop. s. 33. And, moreover, all special customs must submit to the king's prerogative. Therefore, if the king purchases lands of the nature of gavelkind, where all the sons inherit equally; yet, upon the king's demise, his eldest son shall succeed to those lands alone. Co. Lit. 15; 1 Bla. Com. 78.

And thus much for the second part of the leges non scriptæ, or those particular customs which affect particular persons or districts only.

(3) Peculiar laws used in particular courts, are the civil and canon laws.

3. As to those peculiar laws which by custom are adopted and used only in certain peculiar courts and jurisdictions, they are to be understood as the civil and canon laws. See 1 Bla. Com. 79.

STATUTE LAW]—We will now proceed as to the statute law, or, in other words, the leges scriptæ; which consist of statutes, acts, or edicts made by the king's majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal and commons in Parliament assembled. 1 Bla. Com. 78 (a); Com. Dig. Parliament, (R. 3.)

STATUTE LAW.

Many ancient statutes are penned in the form of charters, ordinances, commands, or prohibitions from the king, without mentioning the concurrence of either lords or commons; yet, inasmuch as they have always been acquiesced in as unquestionably authentic, this establishes and confirms their authority, and the defect is salved by such universal reception. Hawkins's Preface to Statutes.

Statutes not in the name of the whole legislature.

As regards the making of these statutes, see 1 Bla. Com. Parliament; Com. Dig. Parliament; Bac. Ab. Statute. We will now proceed to inquire into

- IV. Construction of Statutes, 640.

I. The different Kinds of Statutes.

PUBLIC OR PRIVATE.]—Statutes are either general or special, public or private.

Either public, general, or private.

A general or public act is an universal rule, that regards the whole community; and of this the courts of law are bound to take notice judicially and ex officio; without the statute being particularly pleaded, or formally set forth by the party who claims an advantage under it. 1 Bla. Com. 85.

Public acts, what.

Special or private acts are rather exceptions than rules, being those which only operate upon particular persons and private concerns: such as the Romans entitled senatus-decreta, in contradistinction to the senatus consulta, which regarded the whole community; and of these (which are not promulgated with the same notoriety as the former) the judges are not bound to take notice, unless they be formally shown and pleaded.

Private acts, what.

Statutes may also be local, or referring to the interests of a particular place or district: such as road and inclosure acts, canal acts, or acts for town regulation. All such acts contain a clause by which they shall be deemed public acts. As to such clause, see 1 M. & M. 425; post, 638.

Local.

To show the distinction between public and private acts, it should be observed, the 13 Eliz. c. 10, to prevent spiritual persons from making leases for longer terms than twenty-one years, or three lives, is a public act; it being a rule prescribed to the whole body of spiritual persons in the nation: but an act to enable the Bishop of Chester to make a lease to A. B. for sixty years, is an exception to this rule; it concerns only the parties and the bishop's successors; and is therefore a private act. 1 Bla. Com. 86.

Instances.

All acts which concern the king or queen, or the prince, are general and public acts. 8 Co. 28 a; the Prince's case, 4 Rep. 13, 77 a.

So, a statute which concerns the whole spirituality, will be a general and public act: as the 21 Hen. VIII. c. 13. 4 Rep. 76 a; Brownl. 208.

So, a statute which concerns all officers in general, as the 21 Wil. I. c. 26, that no sheriff or other minister take reward, &c. 4 Rep. 76 a.

So, a statute which concerns trade in general. 4 Rep. 76 b.; Lutw. 1410; Kirk v. Nowill, 1 T. R. 125.

So, a statute by which penalties are given to the king, as the 2 P. & M. c. 11, relating to woollen weavers, &c. Skin. 429.

So, a statute which concerns all the lords generally, as the stat. Marl. 3. 4 Rep. 76 b.

So, if it concerns all persons generally, though it be but a special or particular thing: as, a statute which concerns appeals or assizes, or other particular action. Id.

(a) The oldest statute now extant, and printed in our statute books, is the famous Magna Charta, as confirmed in Parliament, 9 Hen. III.; though, doubtless, there were many acts before that time.

PUBLIC OR PRIVATE.

A statute which concerns only a particular species or thing, or person, will be a private act, of which the judges will not take notice without pleading it: as, the 18 Eliz. c. 6, touching the colleges only in the universities. Eton and Winchester, 4 Rep. 76 a.

In a private act of Parliament, the legislature only lends its aid to the agreement of the parties, in order to render it effectual when any public reason stands in the way. By Ld. Mansfield, C. J., R. v. Toms, Dougl. 406.

It is a rule, that private acts of Parliament, introduced only for the settlement of particular estates, ought to be considered only as common conveyances, and directed by the same rules of law. By Ld. Hardwicke, C. J., Hornby v. Houlditch, 1 T. R. 93, n. a.; 1 Vent. 176; and see Eton College v. Bishop of Winchester, Lofft, 401.

So, a statute which relates to a particular place or town, will be a private law, though it concerns all persons: as, if it relates to such a manor, town, &c. 4 Rep. b; Skin. 350.

So, if it relates to a particular trade. 4 Rep. 76; Kirk v. Nowill, 1 T. R. 125.

Or to divers particular towns. 4 Rep. 76 b.

Or to one or divers particular counties. Id.

So, in a general act there may be a private clause; as in the 3 Jac. c. 5, the clause which gives the benefices of recusants in such particular counties to the university, is a private law. 10 Rep. 57 b.

An act of Parliament, private in its nature, is not made admissible in evidence against strangers by a clause declaring "that it shall be deemed and taken to be a public act, and shall be judicially taken notice of without being specially pleaded." Brett v. Beules, 1 M. & M. C. N. P. 425.

A canal act is not rendered a public act by containing provisions empowering the company to regulate and take tonnage rates and tolls from persons using the canal. Id.

Declaratory statutes, what.

DECLARATORY OR REMEDIAL.]—Statutes also are either declaratory of the common law, or remedial of some defects therein.

Declaratory, where the old custom of the kingdom is almost fallen into disuse, or become disputable; in which case the Parliament has thought proper, in perpetuum rei testimonium, and for avoiding all doubts and difficulties, to declare what the common law is and ever hath been. Thus, the statute of treasons, 25 Edw. III. c. 2, doth not make any new species of treasons, but only, for the benefit of the subject, declares and enumerates those several kinds of offence which were before treason at the common law. 1 Bla. Com. 86.

So, the 46 Geo. III. c. 37, declares that a witness cannot by law refuse to answer a question relevant to the matter in issue, the answering which has no tendency to accuse himself or expose him to penalty or forfeiture, though his answer may subject him to a civil action. This statute does not profess to introduce a new law, but only declares what is the existing law, in consequence of the contrariety of opinions delivered by the judges. See Edwards, Vol. II. p. 88.

The word declare in the act expounds what was the common law before. Twynne's case, 3 Rep.

Remedial statutes, what.

Remedial statutes are those which are made to supply such defects, and abridge such superfluities, in the common law, as arise either from the general imperfection of all human laws, from change of time and circumstances, from the mistakes and unadvised determinations of unlearned (or even learned) judges, or from any other cause whatsoever.

Enlarging and
tutes, what.

And this being done, either by enlarging the common law where it was too narrow and circumscribed, or by restraining it where it was too lax and luxuriant, hath occasioned another subordinate division of remedial acts of Parliament into enlarging and restraining statutes. Instance the case of treason, in clipping the current coin of the kingdom, which was an offence not sufficiently guarded against by the common law; therefore it was thought expedient, by the 5 Eliz. c. 11, to make it high treason, which it was not at the common law: so that this was an enlarging statute. At common law, also, spiritual corporations might lease out their estates for any term of years, till prevented by the 13 Eliz. before mentioned: this was, therefore, a restraining statute. DECLARATORY OR REMEDIAL.

In legal language a remedial statute has a further signification, viz. a statute giving a party a mode of remedy for a wrong where he had none or a different one before; e. g. the statutes of hue and cry: (now repealed by, but most of the enactments re-enacted by, the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 31.) These statutes neither enlarged or abridged the common law, and therefore neither supplied its defects or restrained its excesses; but, as the common law itself originally provided for an exigency, so did the statute. Of such a description namely, remedial, is the giving the owner a right to recover the stolen thing of the person who may have purchased it, provided such owner shall have proceeded to conviction. So, also, the statutes against gaming, which give the loser a right to recover the money lost. 1 Bla. Com. by Lee, p. 87, n. (34).

II. Time when Statute begins to take Effect, and how long it continues in Force.

If an act of Parliament had been brought in at the close of a session, and passed on the last day, which made an innocent act criminal, or even a capital crime, and if no day was fixed for the commencement of its operation, it had the same efficacy as if it had been passed on the first day of the session; and all who during a long session had been doing an act which at that time was legal and inoffensive, were liable to suffer the punishment prescribed by the statute. 4 Inst. 25; 4 T. R. 660; and see 2 Bing. 257. This was both flatly absurd and unjust; but it was the clear law of England, and could only be abrogated by the united authority of the king, lords, and commons in Parliament assembled; who, by the 33 Geo. III. c. 13, enacted, that when the operation of an act of Parliament is not directed to commence from any time specified within it, the clerk of the Parliaments shall indorse upon it the day upon which it receives the royal assent, and that day shall be the date of its commencement. Time of taking effect.

An act made to correct an error by omission in a former statute of the same session, relates back to the time when the first act passed, and must be taken together, as if they were one and the same act. Att.-Gen. v. Pougett, 2 Price, 381.

Where by an act a duty is imposed, with a retrospective date depending on a fact which has taken place, and which is provided for by the alternative expressions "shall be," or "shall have been found," it seems that the duty attaches from such respective date. Hume v. Huig, in error, 8 Bro. P. C. 196.

Ignorance of law will not excuse a crime (see 4 Bla. Com. 27); but ignorance of a law which is of very recent enactment will in some cases afford good reason for a pardon. Thus, where the prisoner was indicted for maliciously shooting a person, and the offence was committed within a few weeks after the passing of the 39 Geo. III. c. 37, and before notice of it could have reached the place where the offence was committed, the judges thought that, as he could not have known of the act, he ought to have a pardon. R. v. Bailey, R. & R. C. 1. Ignorance of statute, how far an crime.

If an act be, to have continuance for three years, and from thence to the end of the next session of Parliament, it shall continue to the end of a session which begins after the three years, though a session within three years continues several months or years after the three years. 1 Vent. 22. How long it shall have continuance.

By the 48 Geo. III. c. 106, where any bill shall be introduced into any session of Parliament, for the continuance of any act which would expire in such sessions, and such act shall have expired before the bill for continuing the same shall have received the royal assent, such continuing act shall be deemed to have effect from the date of the expiration of the act intended to be continued, except it shall be otherwise provided in such continuing act. But nothing herein contained shall extend to affect any person with any punishment, penalty, or forfeiture, by reason of anything done or omitted to be done contrary to the provisions of the act continued, between the expiration of the same and the date at which the act continuing the same shall receive the royal assent.

HOW LONG IT

III. When the King shall be bound by a Statute.

When the king is bound by.

If an act speaks of the king indefiniti, being named in his politic capacity, it extends to all his successors. 12 Rep. 110; 6 Rep. 27 a.

So, to a queen, if the crown descends to a female. 12 Co. 110.

But, generally, the king shall not be restrained of a liberty or a right which he had before, by the general words of an act of Parliament, if the king be not named in the act. Pl. Com. 240; 3 T. R. 521.

Yet, if a statute be intended to give a remedy against a wrong, the king, though not named, shall be bound by it: as by the 32 Hen. VIII. c. 28, to prevent a discontinuance by the husband of the lands of his wife during coverture. R. 2 Inst. 681.

So, in all statutes made against wrong, to prevent fraud, or the decay of religion, the king is bound. R. 5 Rep. 14 b.

And therefore the king shall be bound by the statute Wil. II. c. 1, de donis. 5 Rep. 14 b.

So, by the statute Wil. II. c. 5, against tortious usurpations. Id.

So, the king, though not named, is bound by acts for the advancement of religion, or of learning, or providing for the poor, as the act 10 Car., for uniting livings in Ireland. Str. 516.

Clauses which limit in any way the right of the crown must be considered as repealed by subsequent statutes, unless expressly re-enacted. Att.-Gen. v. Newman, 1 Price, 439.

A statute made for the benefit of the king, shall be construed most beneficially for him: as the 17 Edw. II., de Præp. Regis, which says, that the king shall have the ward of his tenant seised in fee, extends to his tenant seised in tail. Pl. Com. 11 a.

When a statute creates a penalty, and says that one moiety shall be given to the use of the king, and the other to a common informer, the king may sue for the whole, unless a common informer has commenced a qui-tam suit for the penalty. R. v. Hymen, 7 T. R. 536.

IV. Construction of Statutes.

Construction of statutes.

Nothing ought to be considered so necessary to the due administration of the office of justices of the peace, as a thorough acquaintance with the mode of construing statutes, since by far the greater portion of his jurisdiction depends upon them.

Abridgments should never, in any instance, be relied on in the construction of a statute. The statute itself should be consulted. For, according to Lord Coke, the best exposition of all acts of Parliament are the acts of Parliament themselves: "optima statuti interpretatrix est (omnibus particulis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum;" and "injustum est nisi tota lege inspecta, una aliquis ejus particula proposita judicare vel respondere." (a)

The following are the most prominent rules and principles by which statutes are to be construed.

Construction must be according to words and intent of act.

All acts of Parliament, as well private as general, shall be taken by a reasonable construction to be collected out of the words of the acts themselves, according to the true intent and meaning of the makers of the act. Id. Mount-joy's case, 5th Reports; 10 Rep. 57, b.; Com. Dig. Parliament, R. 10. Therefore, if a corporation be misnamed, if it appear that it was intended, it is sufficient. 10 Rep. 57, b.; Com. Dig. Parliament, R. 10.

(a) For these reasons, it is thought expedient, in the present edition of this work, in most instances to give the very words of the statutes.

It has more than once been observed by the court, that the language of acts of Parliament is not to be examined with a critical eye, but according to its plain and obvious meaning. If we can find expressions in a statute capable of an intelligible explanation, it is our duty to give effect to them, according to the obvious intention of the legislature, and not according to a critical and literal interpretation. Per Abbott, C. J., R. v. Bellamy, 2 D. & R. 727, 1 B. & C. 500, S. C.

Where the legislature, in a very modern act of Parliament, have used words of a plain and definite import, it is very dangerous to put upon them a construction, the effect of which will be to hold that the legislature did not mean that which they have expressed. Per Bayley, J., R. v. Stoke Damerel, 7 B. & C., 563; 1 M. & R. 458, S. C.

All statutes in pari materia are to be construed as one law, Dougl. 30; 1 T. R. 53; 3 T. R. 135; and should be construed together, 2 Lofft, 398.

In construing acts of Parliament, the court must take into consideration not only the language of the preamble, or of any particular clause, but of the whole act; and if in some of the enacting clauses expressions are found of more extensive import than in others, the court will give effect to those more extensive expressions, if, upon view of the whole act, it appears to have been the intention of the legislature that they should have effect. Doe v. Brandling, 7 B. & C. 643; 1 M. & R. 600, S. C.; Lincoln College Case, 3 Rep. 58.

No strained construction should be placed upon a statute: it should be construed like a will. Butler and Baker's case, 3 Rep. 25.

Too much stress ought not to be laid on the literal meaning of a statute. Wherever it admits of two constructions, the spirit of it, and intent of the legislature, ought to be regarded in the construction thereof. Thus, the 13 Geo. III. c. 84, s. 34, provides, amongst other exemptions from toll, "or for any horses or carriages which shall only cross any turnpike road, and shall not pass above one hundred yards thereon." A question arose, whether a carriage, which did not cross the road, but quitted it again on the same side on which it entered, was not liable to toll, although it did not pass the one hundred yards. The court held that it was not liable, observing, that the statute meant to exempt carriages making a very slight use of the road. Major v. Osenham, 5 Tamm. 340; ante, Vol. III. p. 188.

Doubtful words should be construed with reference to the object and intentions of the act. See 9 B. & C. 548; R. v. Hall, 1 B. & C. 123.

The construction of private acts of Parliament is to be governed by the principles of common law, and applied to the subject in a manner analogous to the rules of interpretation in a private deed or conveyance. Eton College v. Winchester, Bishop, Lofft, 401.

One part of a statute must be so construed by another, that the whole may (if possible) stand: ut res magis valeat, quam pereat. But a saving, totally repugnant to the body of the act, is void. If, therefore, an act of Parliament vests land in the king and his heirs, saving the right of all persons whatsoever; or vests the land of A. in the king, saving the right of A.; in either of these cases the saving is totally repugnant to the body of the statute, and (if good) would render the statute of no effect or operation; and, therefore, the saving is void, and the land vests absolutely in the king. 1 Rep. 47; 1 Bla. Com. 81.

A saving clause will only save that which is in esse at the time of the saving. Case of Alton Woods, 1 Rep. 40, b.

An act ought not to be construed so as to work an injustice. 8 Rep. 136, a; 6 Bing. 259.

When the provision of a statute is general, it is subject to the control and order of the common law, and it should be construed accordingly, for statutes are not presumed to make any alteration in the common law, further or otherwise than the act expressly declares; therefore, in all general matters, the law presumes the act did not intend to make any alteration, for if the Parliament had that design, they would have expressed it in the act. Harbert's case, 3 Rep. 116; also, R. v. Bishop of London, 1 Shaw, 455; Hard, 62; 11 Mod. 150.

Should be construed like a will.

If in the same act of Parliament there be one clause which applies to a particular case, and another which is conceived in general terms, the former shall not restrain the signification of the latter. Per Buller, J., Andree v. Fletcher, 2 T. R. 164.

But where a general intention is expressed, and the act expresses also a particular intention incompatible with the general intention, the particular intention is to be considered in the nature of an exception. Per Best, C. J., Churchill v. Crease, 5 Bing. 180.

Title of act.

The title of a statute is no part of the law. R. v. Williams, 1 W. Bla. 95.

The preamble to be considered.

The preamble is deemed true, and is a good means for collecting the intent, and may always assist in the solution of doubts. Crespigny v. Witternoon, 4 T. R. 793; 1 Inst. 11. But the preamble shall not restrain the operation of the enacting part of a statute which is expressed in clear and unambiguous words: as, where the preamble reciteth only a particular inconvenience, this shall not hinder a subsequent enacting clause from being understood in that more general sense which the words would otherwise and of themselves import, so as to take in other inconveniences of the like kind, although not specified in the preamble. 8 Mod. 144; 1 P. Wm. 320; Loft, 782; Patterson v. Bankes, Cowp. 543; Perkins v. Sewell, 1 Bla. Rep. 659. See the rule laid down in 7 B. & C. 643, ante, 641.

Usage to explain.

Where the words of a statute are doubtful, general usage may be called in to explain them; but, where they are clear, the usage of a particular place cannot control them. R. v. Hogg, 1 T. R. 728. The usage of any particular place alone cannot do so. Id. Cald. 266, S. C.

Enactments in statute itself for its interpretation.

The statute itself, especially of late, frequently contains a clause laying down rules of interpretation of doubtful words and clauses therein, as do the statutes relative to Saving Banks, Friendly Societies, Lunatics, Lighting and Watching Parishes, &c. &c.; and see the respective titles.

Rule for the interpretation of all criminal statutes.

The following is the new and important provision of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 14, relative to the interpretation of all criminal statutes. The words of the enactment are—"that wherever this or any other statute relating to any offence, whether punishable upon indictment or summary conviction, in describing or referring to the offence or the subject-matter on or with respect to which it shall be committed, or the offender or the party affected or intended to be affected by the offence, hath used or shall use words importing the singular number or the masculine gender only, yet the statute shall be understood to include several matters as well as one matter, and several persons as well as one person, and females as well as males, and bodies corporate as well as individuals, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; and wherever any forfeiture or penalty is payable to a party aggrieved, it shall be payable to a body corporate in every case where such body shall be the party aggrieved."

Remedial statutes to be construed literally.

There are three points to be considered in the construction of all remedial statutes; the old law, the mischief, and the remedy: that is, how the common law stood at the making of the act; what the mischief was, for which the common law did not provide; and what remedy the Parliament hath provided to cure this mischief. And it is the business of the judges so to construe the act as to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy, consistently with the fair construction of the act. Heydon's case, 3 Rep. 7; Co. Lit. 11, 42; 1 Bla. Com. 81; Johnes v. Johnes, 3 Dow, 15; Atcheson v. Everitt, Cowp. 391, S. P.; Stainford v. Sinclair, 9 Moore, 379; 2 Bing. 193, S. C.

All cases within the same mischief.

So, in all cases within the same mischief, the case shall be construed within the intent, though it be not within the letter of the statute. Com. Dig. Parliament, (R. 13.) As the statute Marlb. 29, which gives remedy to the successor, ad bonæ ecclesiæ repelenda, extends to trespass for cutting down trees. 2 Inst. 152.

The 2 Geo. II. c. 22, continued by the 29 Geo. II. c. 28, expired 1st June, 1759; the 32 Geo. II. c. 28, commenced 15th June, 1759; so there was a chasm of fourteen days. The court declared they would construe equitably, and that Trinity Term, 1759, ought to be considered as the term in which such prisoners (as had been precluded by the expiration of the former act from completing their discharge under it) were charged in execution, and therefore they had Michaelmas Term for the first term next after their being charged in execution. 2 B. M. 901.

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

But a casus omisus can in no case be supplied by a court of law; for that would be to make laws. Per Buller, J., Jones v. Smart, 1 T. R. 52.

Casus omisus.

A case, out of the mischief intended to be remedied by a statute, shall be construed to be out of the purview, though it be within the words of the statute. 2 Inst. 386.

A case out of mischief provided against.

Statutes against frauds are to be liberally and beneficially expounded. This may seem a contradiction to the rule, that penal statutes should be construed strictly; most statutes against frauds being in their consequences penal. But this difference is here to be taken: where the statute acts upon the offender, and inflicts a penalty, as the pillory or a fine, it is then to be taken strictly; but when the statute acts upon the offence, by setting aside the fraudulent transaction, here it is to be construed liberally. Upon this footing the statute of 13 Eliz. c. 5, which avoids all gifts of goods, &c. made to defraud creditors and others, was held to extend by the general words to a gift made to defraud the queen of a forfeiture. Twynne's case, 3 Rep. 81.

Statutes against frauds construed liberally.

And it has been held that the same words in a statute will bear different interpretations, according to the nature of the suit or prosecution instituted upon them. As, by the 9 Anne, c. 14, the statute against gaming, if any person shall lose at any time or sitting 10*l.*, and shall pay it to the winner, he may recover it back within three months; and if the loser does not, within that time, any other person may sue for it, and treble the value besides. So, where an action was brought to recover back fourteen guineas, which had been won and paid after a continuance at play, except an interruption during dinner, the court held the statute was remedial, as far as it prevented the effects of gaming, without inflicting a penalty, and therefore, in this action, they considered it one time or sitting; but they said, if an action had been brought by a common informer for the penalty, they would have construed it strictly in favour of the defendant, and would have held that the money had been lost at two sittings. 2 Bla. Rep. 1226.

A penal statute may also be a remedial law. 1 Wils. 126.

Statute penal as well as remedial.

And a statute may be penal in one part and remedial in another part. Dougl. 702.

A statute for suppression of wrong, or for public good, shall be construed like a remedial act, though it be penal against the offenders. Pl. Com. 82 a, 17 a.

Where an offence, created or made penal by statute, is in its nature single, one single penalty only can be recovered, though several join in committing it; but if the offence is in its nature several, each offender is separately liable to the penalty. R. v. Clark, Cowp. 610.

As, the stat. of Glou. 5, which gives treble damages, &c. in waste, against tenant for years, extends by equity to a tenant for half a year. Pl. Com. 178.

The stat. Wil. II., which gives debt against a gaoler for an escape of one committed for arrears of an account, extends to an escape of any committed in execution for debt. Pl. Com. 178 a, 35 a.

So the stat. of Glou. 5, which gives remedy for waste against a lessee, extends to a devise for life or years. Pl. Com. 10 a.

The stat. 1 Edw. II., de frangentibus prisonam, says, that a felon who breaks prison shall be guilty of felony; but it shall not be so if the prison was on fire. Pl. Com. 13.

Penal statutes must be construed strictly. Thus, the 1 Edw. VI. c. 12, having enacted, that those who are convicted of stealing horses should not have the benefit of clergy, the judges conceived that this should not extend to him that should steal but one horse, (a) and therefore procured a new act for that

Penal statutes construed strictly

(a) Lord Hale thinks that the scruple of the judges did not merely depend upon the words being in the plural number, because no doubt had ever occurred respecting former statutes in the plural number; as, for instance, it was enacted by the 32 Hen. VIII. c. 1, that no person convicted of burning any dwelling houses should be admitted to clergy. But the reason of the difficulty in the case was, because the statute of 37 Hen. VIII. c. 8, was expressly penned in the purpose in the following year, 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 33. Bac. Elem. c. 12. And by the 14 Geo. II. c. 6, stealing sheep, or other cattle, was made felony, without benefit of clergy. But these general words, "or other cattle," being looked upon as much too loose to create a capital offence, the act was held to extend to nothing but mere sheep. And therefore, in the next sessions, it was found necessary to make another statute, 15 Geo. II. c. 34, extending the former to bulls, cows, oxen, steers, bullocks, heifers, calves, and lambs, by name. And see now the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29. It has since been decided, that where statutes use the plural number, a single instance will be comprehended. The 2 Geo. II. c. 25, enacts, that it shall be felony to steal any bank-notes, and it has been determined that the offence is complete by stealing one bank-note. Hassel's case, Leach's Cr. L. 1.

The statute against maintenance shall be construed strictly. Com. Dig. Parliament, (R. 20), 86 b.

The statute de malefactoribus in parvis was held not to extend to those in forests. Id.

So, the general words of a penal statute shall be restrained for the benefit of him against whom the penalty is inflicted.

As the stat. Wil. II. 11, that the body of an accountant shall be committed by the auditors to gaol, without saying at what time; but he cannot be committed by them, if it be not immediately upon the account. Pl. Com. 17 a.

So, where the 12 Geo. II. c. 34, s. 2, directs that the sheriff should proclaim the order in council against offenders under that act, in two market towns, near the place where such offence was committed, the word near shall be taken to mean a reasonable vicinity, though not equivalent to next. 1 Wils. 164; 1 Bl. 20.

But the exposition of a penal statute ought to be such, that the statute be not eluded. 2 Rol. 127; Com. Dig. Parliament, (R. 28.)

Where a statute gives accumulative damages to the party grieved, it is not penal. Woodgate v. Knatchbull, 2 T. R. 154.

Every statute which introduces a capital punishment must be construed strictly. R. v. Harvey, 1 Wils. 164.

Statutes under which parties are made exempt from duties imposed by general acts should be construed strictly. Perchard v. Heywood, 8 T. R. 468.

Explanatory statutes should not be construed by any strained sense against the letter of the act; for, if any such exposition should be made, there would be no end of expounding. Butler and Baker's case, 3 Rep. 25.—They ought to be construed beneficially.

Where a special authority is delegated, by act of Parliament, to particular persons to take away a man's property and estate against his will, there it must be strictly pursued, and must appear to be so upon the face of the proceedings. R. v. Croke, Coup. 26. An enlarged construction must not be put thereon. Lofft, 438.

If an act of Parliament gives to the lord of a manor the conusance of all pleas within his manor, he shall not have conusance where he himself is party; iniquum est aliquam suæ rei esse judicem. Bonham's case, 8 Coke 118, a.

If a statute says, that anything for the public benefit may be done, it shall be sometimes construed that it must be done: as the 23 H. 6, c. 10, says, the sheriff, &c. may bail, he shall be bound to bail. Salk. 609; Com. Dig. Parliament, (R. 22.)

The 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12, enacts, that the overseers may make a rate to reimburse the constables: this is construed they shall; for they are compellable so to do. 2 Salk. 609.

The words "shall and may" are only imperative where the clause in a statute is for the public benefit. R. v. Flockwood Inclosure (Commissioners), 2 Chit. 251; 5 B. & A. 691.

singular number, If any man do steal any horse, mare, or filly; and then this statute, thus varying the number, and at the same time expressly repealing all other exclusions of clergy introduced since the beginning of Hen. VIII., it raised a doubt whether it were not intended by the legislature to restore clergy where only one horse was stolen. 2 H. P. C. 365.

But exposition ought not to be such as to elude the act.

What not a penal act.

Statute introducing capital punishment.

Exemption from duties by general statutes.

Explanatory statutes.

Statute against common rights.

When words of permission obligatory, as the words, "shall and may be," &c.

But if from the whole act it appears the legislature did not intend the words shall and may as imperative, they cannot be so construed—as where an act directed it should and might be lawful for trustees to do an act if it should be deemed proper, &c., it was held the enactment was merely directory. De Beauvoir v. Welch, 7 B. & C. 226; 1 M. & R. 81, S. C.; ante, Vol. III. p. 150.

In R. v. the Bailiffs of Eye, 4 B. & A. 271, the words “it shall be lawful,” came under consideration as occurring in one of their by-laws; on which Abbott, C. J., observed, “the words are, ‘that it shall be lawful for the bailiffs, &c. to admit.’” Those words clearly give to the bailiffs a discretionary power to admit the persons who have the qualifications therein mentioned, but they by no means make it imperative on them so to do. See, also, Allen v. Waldgrave, 2 Moore, 625; 8 Taun. 566, S. C.

A statute which treats of things or persons of an inferior rank, cannot by any general words be extended to those of a superior. So, a statute treating of “deans, prebendaries, parsons, vicars, and others having spiritual promotion,” is held not to extend to bishops, though they have spiritual promotion, deans being the highest persons named, and bishops being of a still higher order. Canterbury's case, 2 Rep. 46; Hard. 442. This construction must be presumed to be most conformable to the intention of the legislature.

Where a statute mentions inferior conveyances, the subsequent words, “by any other means,” cannot be intended of an act of Parliament, which is the highest manner of conveyance that can be; and, therefore, the makers of the act would have put that in the beginning, and not in the end, after the inferior conveyances, if they had intended to extend the act thereunto. Archbishop of Canterbury's case, 2 Rep. 46 b.; Copland v. Powell, 1 Bing. 373.

Where a statute speaks of indictments to be taken before justices of the peace, or others having power to take indictments, it shall be understood only of other inferior courts, and not of the King's Bench, or other courts at Westminster. Canterbury's case, 2 Rep. 46; 2 Haw. c. 27, s. 124.

Where a statute directs a penalty to be recovered in any court of record, this shall not be intended of the quarter sessions, unless it be specially named in such statute; but only of the courts of record at Westminster. 6 Rep. 19, 20; 2 Hale, 29, 30.

On the other hand, it seems that, if a statute names inferiors, it includes superiors. As, if a statute makes the securities given by the sureties of the farmers of the excise to be exempted out of the act of oblivion, a fortiori, the securities of the farmers themselves shall be exempted. R. Hard. 424.

Where the moiety of a penalty is given by statute to the treasurer of a county, riding, or division, the word “division” does not apply to small districts, such as the Cinque-Port of Seaford, in Sussex, but must be construed with reference to county and riding, and means something analogous to them. Evans, q. t., v. Stevens, 4 T. R. 224, 459.

Neither can it be applied to the different parts of a county in which the magistrates act under one general commission, but for the convenience of the county adjourn the quarter sessions from one part of it to another, and appoint a separate treasurer for each. Evans, q. t., v. Stevens, 4 T. R. 225, 459.

Regularly, where an act of Parliament giveth a power or interest to one person certain, by this express designation of one, all others are excluded. 11 Rep. 59, 64.

Where persons, as justices, commissioners, &c., have special authority by statute, they have none but what is under such statute, all other acts being void. R. v. Lindale, 1 Burr. 445.

An act of Parliament, authorizing persons to repair and cleanse a navigable river, does not authorize them to make a passage to a new wharf on the river. Poathwicke v. Mason, 2 Chit. 658.

In all cases, where justices may take examinations, or other accusation or proof, though the statute doth not expressly set down that it shall be upon oath, yet it shall be intended that it shall be upon oath. Dalt. c. 115.

Generally it is holden, that where a statute appoints a thing to be done by one or more justices without giving any appeal to the sessions, there the justices in sessions may do that thing; but where an appeal is given to the ses-

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.	sions, the justices in sessions cannot proceed originally therein, because that method would take away the power of appealing. See Sessions, ante , p. 475.
Power to convene the parties.	Where a statute gives power to the justices to require any person to do a thing, as to take the oaths, the law implicitly gives them power to issue their precept to have the body before them: for when the law granteth anything to any one, that also is granted without which the thing itself cannot be; and it is against the office of the justices, and the authority given them by the law, that they shall go and seek the parties, 12 Rep. 130, 131.
Necessity of summoning the party.	Where a statute gives power to the justices of the peace to hear and determine an offence in a summary way, it is necessarily implied and supposed, as a part of natural justice, that the party be first cited, and have opportunity to be heard and answer for himself. 1 Haw. c. 64, s. 60; see Constitution , Vol. I. p. 827.
Two justices to be both together.	Where an act of Parliament gives power to two justices finally to hear and determine an offence, it is necessarily supposed, that they shall be both together, or, which is the same thing in other words, that they shall hold a special sessions for that purpose. And the like is, when they are to do any other judicial act, as to make an order of bastardy, or adjudge the settlement of a poor person. For it is unknown to the laws of England, that two persons shall act as judges in the same cause, when at the same time one of them is in one part of the country and the other in another. See Justices , Vol. III. p. 466.
Informers' oath.	Where a statute appoints a conviction to be on the oath of one witness, this ought not to be by the single oath of the informer; for if the same person shall be allowed to be both prosecutor and witness, it would induce profligate persons to commit perjury for the sake of the reward. 2 Ld. Raym. 1545; see Constitution , Vol. I. p. 817; Vol. II. p. 74.
Confession.	Where a statute directeth that a person shall be convicted of an offence upon the oath of one or more witnesses, and saith nothing of the confession of the party, yet if the offender shall before the justice confess the offence, he may be convicted upon such confession: for confession is stronger evidence than the oath of witnesses. Dalt. 109, 162; 1 Str. 546; see Constitution , Vol. I. p. 830.
Discretionary power.	Where an act of Parliament gives power to the justices of the peace to take order in any matter according to their discretions, this shall be understood according to the rules of reason, law, and justice, and not by private opinion. 5 Rep. 100; see 8 Howell's St. Tri. 55 (notis); and Justices , Vol. III. p. 465.
England including Wales.	In all cases where the kingdom of England, or that part of Great Britain called England, hath been or shall be mentioned in any act of Parliament, the same shall be deemed to comprehend the dominion of Wales, and town of Berwick-upon-Tweed. 20 Geo. II. c. 42, s. 3.
Berwick. Mitigating penalties.	Where a statute gives discretionary power of mitigating penalties, it is a general rule that there the legislature must be taken to have intended to place the matter under the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace. Per Abbott, C.J., Reeve v. Poole , 4 B. & C. 156.
Twelve months.	It may be laid down as an invariable rule, that the law favours liberty: so that, in the construction of a penal statute, where the interpretation is dubious, that sense must be pursued (all other things being equal) which is more beneficial to the subject, or the party suffering. Thus, where an act directs that the justices shall commit an offender to prison for twelve months, the justices may not alter the words, and commit him for a year; for, in this respect, twelve months and one year are not the same: but the months must be computed at twenty-eight days to the month, and not as calender months, unless it be so expressed in the act. See post , Time .
Quakers' affirmation.	In all cases wherein, by any act of Parliament, an oath shall be allowed or required, the solemn affirmation of Quakers shall be allowed instead of such an oath, although no particular or express provision be made for that purpose in the said act. 22 Geo. II. c. 46, s. 3. By the 9 Geo. 4. c. 32, ante , Substance . Vol. II. p. 86, a Quaker or Moravian required to give evidence in a criminal case may, instead of an oath, take the affirmation or declaration therein prescribed.
Forfeiture.	To say that a person shall forfeit generally, or that he shall forfeit to the king, is all one; for the king shall have every forfeiture not otherwise limited. 11 Rep. 60. Except where a forfeiture is given in lieu of property and interest; for there it shall go to the party injured. 1 Roll. Rep. 90. For, whosoever a statute giveth a forfeiture or penalty, against him which wrongfully detaineth or dispossesseth another of his duty or interest, in that case, he that hath the wrong shall have the forfeiture or penalty, and shall have an action for the same upon the statute, and the king shall not have the forfeiture in that case. 1 Inst. 159.

CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES.

Where a statute saith, that such a person shall pay fine and ransom to the king, in legal understanding such fine and ransom are all one: for, if they were divers, then should the party pay two sums, one for the fine and another for the ransom, which was never done. 1 Inst. 127.

Fine and ransom.

Acts of Parliament that speak of fines or ransoms at the king's pleasure, are always to be understood of the king in his courts by his justices. 1 Hale, 375.

At the king's pleasure.

It is said, that whosoever a justice of the peace is empowered, by any statute, to bind a person over, or to cause him to do a certain thing, and such person, being in his presence shall, refuse to be bound or to do such thing, the justice may commit him to the gaol, to remain there till he shall comply. 2 Haw. c. 16, s. 2. See, Commitment, Vol. I. p. 757; Justices, Vol. III. p. 469.

Where a power of commitment is implied.

When a statute appoints imprisonment, but limits no time when, it shall be immediately. 8 Rep. 119.

Imprisonment, when.

When a statute appoints imprisonment, but limits no time how long, the prisoner in such case must remain at the discretion of the court. Dalt. 410.

Imprisonment, how long.

Where any offender shall by a justice of the peace be committed to the house of correction for an offence cognizable before him out of sessions, and the time and manner of punishment is not by law expressly limited, he may commit him to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour until the next general or quarter sessions, or until discharged by due course of law. 17 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 32.

Commitment to the house of correction, for what time.

Wherever a statute makes any offence felony, it incidently gives it all the properties of felony at common law. 1 Haw. c. 38, s. 18.

Statute making an offence felony.

Therefore, an act of Parliament that makes an offence felony, doth consequently introduce the punishment of concealing,—that is, misprision of felony; and every offence made felony by act of Parliament includeth misprision. 1 Hale, 708.

Misprision.

An act making a new felony extendeth not to infants under fourteen years of age; but if they be of that age it binds them. 1 Hale, 706; see Infants, Vol. III.

Infants.

Not only those crimes which are made felonies by the express words of any statute, but also those which are decreed to have or undergo judgment of life and member, do become felonies thereby, whether the word felony were mentioned or not. 1 Haw. c. 40, s. 1.

Life and member.

But an offence shall never be made felony, by the construction of any doubtful and ambiguous words of a statute; and, therefore, if it be only prohibited under pain of forfeiting body and goods, or of being at the king's will for body, lands, and goods, it shall amount unto no more than a high misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment or the like. Id. s. 2.

Body and goods.

Saving of dower in a statute making an offence felony, is superfluous; for, by the 1 Edw. VI. c. 12, s. 17, dower is not lost by the felony of the husband.

Forfeiture of dower.

Where any complaint shall be made before a justice, and a warrant or summons shall issue in consequence thereof, the justice, upon hearing and determining the matter, may award costs to either party: but if the conviction be upon a penal statute, and the penalty amounts to 5*l.* or upwards, the costs shall be deducted out of the penalty. 18 Geo. III. c. 19; see Costs, Vol. I.

Costs.

Upon an indictment or other criminal prosecution, no damages can be given to the party grieved; but it is every day's practice in the Court of King's Bench to induce defendants to make satisfaction to the prosecutors, by intimating an inclination on that account to mitigate the fine due to the king. 2 Haw. c. 25, s. 3; see further, Justices, Vol. III. p. 470.

Damages.

Where a statute gives treble damages, the justices are not to assess the damages, and then treble them; but the jury ought to find the damages, and then the justices are to treble them. Cro. Car. 449. Justices, Vol. III. p. 470.

Treble damages.

In all cases where a justice is required by any act of Parliament to issue a warrant of distress for the levying of any penalty inflicted, or any sum of money directed to be paid by such act, it shall be lawful for such justice granting the warrant, therein to order and direct the goods distrained to be sold within a certain time to be limited in such warrant, so as such time be not less than four days, nor more than eight days, unless such penalty or sum of money, together with the reasonable charges of taking and keeping the distress, be sooner repaid. And the officer making such distress may deduct the reasonable charges of taking, keeping, and selling the said distress; and the overplus, if any, shall be returned to the owner on demand. Except only in cases of distress for Quakers' tithes and church-rates. 27 Geo. II. c. 20; see Distress, Vol. I.

Second offence.

An act inflicting a penalty for a second offence must always be understood, after conviction and judgment for the first offence; and the second offence must be committed after the first conviction, and judgment thereupon given; for it doth not appear to be an offence, until judgment by proceeding of law be given against the offender. 2 Inst. 468.

And the indictment for a second offence must recite the record of the first conviction; and, upon the evidence, the record of the first conviction must be proved: but the matter of the first conviction shall never be re-examined, but must stand for granted. 1 Hale, 686.

Expense of jury.

A private act which provides for the expense of maintaining a jury does not extend to a dinner given to them at a tavern after they had delivered their verdict. Forster v. Taylor, 3 Comp. 49.

Forms given by statute.

As to how far the forms prescribed by a statute must be followed, see, fully, Conbiction, Vol. I. p. 846, 847.

If a particular form of a notice or order be prescribed by a private act of Parliament, it must be fully set out and precisely pursued; and an allegation that due notice was given is not sufficient. R. v. Croker, Coup. 30.

And a defective notice, under a private act of Parliament, is not cured by the appearance of the party. Id.

As to the construction of clauses limiting the time for bringing actions, &c., for prosecutions, &c., under the act, or for acts done under it, see, post, Time; Conbiction, Vol. I.; Justices, Vol. III. p. 495.

In what time prosecution shall be on penal statutes.

All actions, indictments, or informations, on penal statutes, for any forfeiture limited to the king, shall be brought within two years after the offence committed; if limited to the king and prosecutor, then within one year; and if it is not sued for in that one year, then the king may sue for the same within two years after the expiration of that one year, and not otherwise. 31 Eliz. c. 5, s. 5. That is to say, unless where it is otherwise specially directed by subsequent statutes. See Information, Vol. III. p. 369, 370.

Where time limited, the thing must be done within it.

Wherever a statute imposes terms and prescribes a thing to be done within a certain time, the lapse of a day is fatal, even in a penal case, because no inferior court can admit of any terms but such as directly and precisely satisfy the law. Farrell v. Tomlinson, 5 Bro. P. C. 438; 8 Rep. 119.

Act indemnifying persons acting under it.

It has uniformly been held, that where a party bond fide believes or supposes he is acting in pursuance of an act of Parliament, he is within the protection of its clauses. Beechey v. Sides, 9 B. & C. 809; and see the various decisions collected under the title Justices, Vol. III. p. 491.

Where an act gives certain privileges to officers who may be sued for things done in pursuance thereof, and a subsequent act imposes new obligations, the privileges given by the former act do not attach upon things done in pursuance of the latter. Basing v. Skelton, 5 T. R. 16.

How far an indictment will lie, where another method of prosecution is appointed.

Where a statute makes a new offence, which was no way prohibited by the common law, and appoints a particular manner of proceeding against the offender, as by a commitment, or action of debt, or information, without mentioning an indictment, it seems to be settled at this day, that it will not maintain an indictment, because the mentioning the other methods of proceeding only seems impliedly to exclude that of indictment: yet it hath been adjudged that if such statute gave a recovery by action of debt, bill, plaint, information, or otherwise, it authorizes a proceeding by way of indictment. 2 Haw. c. 25, s. 4.

And if there be a prohibitory clause in the act, the offender may be indicted upon the prohibitory clause, notwithstanding the penalty: but otherwise it is, where the act is not prohibitory, but only inflicts the forfeiture, and specifies the remedy. 2 Hale, 171; 1 Burr. 543.

But where the offence was antecedently punishable by a common law proceeding, and a statute prescribes a particular remedy by a summary proceeding, there either method may be pursued, and the prosecutor is at liberty to proceed either at common law or in the method prescribed by the statute: because in that case the sanction is cumulative, and doth not exclude the common-law proceeding. 2 Burr. 803; Sharp v. Warren, 6 Price, 131. R. v. Carlile, 3 B. & A. 161; Blasphem. Vol. I. p. 400.

But every contempt of a statute is indictable where no other punishment is limited. 1 Haw. c. 22, s. 5; see Indictment, Vol. III. p. 320.

And whosoever an act of Parliament doth generally prohibit any thing, the party grieved shall not only have his action for his private relief, but the offender shall be punished at the king's suit, for the contempt of the law. 2 Inst. 163.

And when a new offence is created by one clause of an act, and a penalty annexed by a separate and substantive clause, a prosecutor may indict on the clause creating the offence, and is not obliged to sue for the penalty. R. v. Harris, 4 T. R. 205.

Wherever an act of Parliament gives a right, the common law gives a remedy. Ashby v. White, Salk. 20, 21; 6 Mod. 54.

If it be doubtful whether a statute declaring an act, instrument, or contract, void, makes it voidable only, another clause in the same statute, imposing a penalty on such act, instrument, or contract, is a clear test that it is, ipso facto, void. Gye v. Felton, 4 Tam. 876.

Where a statute points out the manner in which a canal company shall convey lands, and enacts that "every such conveyance shall be valid," it does not cure any defect in the title of lands so conveyed. Ward v. Scott, 3 Campb. 284.

Where an act of Parliament alters the service, tenure, or interest in the land in prejudice of the lord or tenant, there the general words of such act will not extend to copyholds; but if an act is made for the public good, and no prejudice accrues to the lord or tenant, there copyholds are within the purview of it. Heyden's case, 3 Rep. 7.

If, under an act of Parliament, the property in goods, chattels, furniture, clothing, and debts, is vested in certain directors of the poor, yet the property in money and securities for money is not vested in them by those words. R. v. Beacall, and R. v. Willings, 1 C. & P. 454.

Statutes conferring privileges on the members of the universities mean only the members of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, unless otherwise expressed. Jones v. Smart, 1 T. R. 49.

Repeal of a Statute, what shall be—A statute may be repealed by the express words of a subsequent statute, or by implication.

The bare recital of a statute is not sufficient to repeal the positive provisions of a former statute, without a clause of repeal. Dore v. Gray, 2 T. R. 365.

A statute cannot be repealed by nonuser. White v. Boot, 2 T. R. 275.

Where the words of an act of Parliament are plain, it cannot be repealed by nonuser; yet, where there has been a series of practice without any exception, it goes a great way to explain the act, where there is any ambiguity. Per Ld. Kenyon, C. J., Leigh v. Kent, 3 T. R. 364.

Where the common law and a statute differ, the common law gives place to the statute; and an old statute gives place to a new one; and this upon a general principle of universal law, that "leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant;" consonant to which it was laid down by a law of the twelve tables at Rome, that "quod populus podremum jussit, id jus ratum esto." 1 Bla. Com. 89.

But this is to be understood only when the latter statute is couched in negative terms, or where its matter is so clearly repugnant, that it necessarily implies a negative. As, if a former act says, that a juror upon such a trial shall have twenty pounds a year, and a new statute afterwards enacts that he shall have twenty marks; here the latter statute, though it does not express, yet necessarily implies a negative, and virtually repeals the former: for if twenty marks be made qualification sufficient, the former statute, which requires twenty pounds, is at an end. Jenk. Cent. 2, 73; 1 Ld. Raym. 160.

But, if both acts be merely affirmative, and the substance such that both may stand together, here the latter does not repeal the former, but they shall both have a concurrent efficacy. If, by a former law, an offence be indictable at the quarter sessions, and a latter law makes the same offence indictable at the assizes, here the jurisdiction of the sessions is not taken away, but both have a concurrent jurisdiction, and the offender may be prosecuted at either; unless the new statute subjoins express negative words: as, that the offence shall be indictable at the assizes, and not elsewhere. 11 Rep. 63; Com. Dig. Parliament, R. 9.

The 23 Eliz. 1, which gives 20*l.* per month against a recusant, does not take away the penalty of 12*d.* for every Sunday, given by the 1 Eliz. c. 2. 11 Rep. 63 b.

But, where affirmative words in sense contain a negative,—as, where a new ordinance is made which directs the form or order of the proceeding, it shall be otherwise. Pl. Com. 113.

Where a new act does not continue the old mode enacted in a prior act, but substitutes a new mode, the substitution of the new mode supersedes, with all its consequences, the old. A variation in the mode implies a change in the intention of the legislature. Had it been intended to continue the old system, the use of the old language, and the continuance of the old mode, would naturally have been expected. Where new language is introduced, and a new mode adopted, it must be supposed a new system was intended. See, per Bailey, J., Fearnley v. Morley, 5 B. & C. 30; 7 D. & R. 832, S. C.; Gray v. Shilling, 2 B. & B. 30; 4 Moore, 371, S. C.

Where the intention appears that the subsequent act shall not have such an operation, though the words, taken strictly and grammatically, would repeal a former act, the courts hold that they ought not to receive such a construction. See Williams v. Pritchard, 4 T. R. 2.

Affirmative words in an act of Parliament, without any negative, express or implied, do not take away the common law. Pl. Com. 112; 2 Inst. 200.

Where, by the 1 Eliz. c. 2, a minister who does not read the common prayer shall lose the profits of his benefice for the first offence, and, being convicted, &c., for a second offence, shall be deprived; yet he might be deprived by the high commission erected by the power of the common law for the first offence, without a conviction, &c., or the methods directed by the statute. 5 Rep. 5 b.; De Jur. Eccl.; and see, ante, 648, 649.

So, general words do not take away a particular privilege or benefit: as the stat. Wil. II. c. 18, which gives an elegit, does not take away the privilege an infant has, that he shall not be sued during his non-age, if an elegit be against the heir of a consor, being an infant. 2 Inst. 395.

A power in an act of Parliament to continue private ways does not alter the liability of parties to repair them. Anon. Lofft, 465.

So, where Southwark chose scavengers by custom, the 14 Car. II. c. 2, which says, constable and churchwardens, &c., shall meet in Easter week, and choose, does not take away a custom to choose at the leet. Dub. 2 Mod. 41.

So, affirmative statutes do not take away a prior exemption. Dougl. 188.

An act lately made may be within the equity of an act made long since. See Vernon's case, 4 Rep. 1.

A statute extends to a provision made by a subsequent statute. Therefore, a statute shall be extended to cases provided by a subsequent statute; as, if extensors value goods too high, upon the stat. Acton Burnel, 13 Edw. I., they shall take them at the same price as was provided by the stat. de Merc. 11 Edw. I. Hard. 211.

The st. M. Ch. 9, Hen. III. c. 9, which says, "omnes barones de quinque portibus habeant omnes libertates, et consuetudines suas," shall be restrained to such liberties as are not taken away by another branch of the same statute; and therefore they shall not hold placita corone. 2 Inst. 31.

A statute made in affirmance of the common law extends to all future times. 2 Inst. 236.

A statute extends

If a statute that repeals another is itself repealed afterwards, the first statute is hereby revived, without any formal words for that purpose. So, when the statutes of the 26 and 35 Hen. VIII., declaring the king to be the supreme head of the church, were repealed by a statute, 1 & 2 P. & M., and this latter statute was afterwards repealed by an act of 1 Eliz., there needed not any express words of revival in Queen Elizabeth's statute, but these acts of King Henry were impliedly and virtually revived. 4 Inst. 325.

But if a statute be repealed by several acts, a repeal of one act, and not of all, does not revive the first statute. 12 Rep. 8.

If an expired statute be afterwards revived by another statute, the law derives its force from the first. Shipman v. Henbert, 4 T. R. 109.

Where a statute professes to repeal absolutely a prior law, and substitutes other provisions on the same subject, which are limited to continue only till a certain time, the prior law does not revive after the repealing statute is spent, unless the intention of the legislature to that effect be expressed. Warren v. Windle, 3 East, 205.

No proceedings can be pursued under a repealed statute, though commenced before the repeal, unless by special exception. Miller's case, 3 Wils. 420; 1 W. Bla. 451, S. C.

A contract declared by a statute to be illegal is not made good by a subsequent repeal of the statute. Jacques v. Wittey, 1 H. Bla. 65.

When an act of Parliament is repealed, it must be considered (except as to transactions past and closed) as if it had never existed. Per Lord Tenterden, C. J., 9 B. & C., 752.

Acts of Parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent Parliaments bind not. So, the 11 Hen. VII. c. 1, which directs that no person, for assisting a king de facto, shall be attainted of treason by act of Parliament, or otherwise, is held to be good only as to common prosecutions for high treason; but will not restrain or clog any parliamentary attainder. 4 Inst. 43. Because the legislature, being in truth the sovereign power, is always of equal, always of absolute, authority: it acknowledges no superior upon earth, which the prior legislature must have been, if its ordinances could bind a subsequent Parliament. And, upon the same principle, Cicero, in his letters to Atticus, treats with a proper contempt these restraining clauses, which endeavour to tie up the hands of succeeding legislatures. "When you repeal the law itself," says he, "you, at the same time, repeal the prohibitory clause, which guards against such repeal." 1 Bla. Com. 90.

Acts of Parliament that are impossible to be performed are of no validity; and, if there arise out of them collaterally any absurd consequences, manifestly contradictory to common reason, they are, with regard to those collateral consequences, void. I lay down the rule with these restrictions; though I know it is generally laid down more largely, that acts of Parliament contrary to reason are void. But if the Parliament will positively enact a thing to be done which is unreasonable, I know of no power in the ordinary forms of the constitution that is vested with authority to control it; and the examples usually alleged in support of this sense of the rule do none of them prove that, where the main object of a statute is unreasonable, the judges are at liberty to reject it; for that were to set the judicial power above that of the legislature, which would be subversive of all government. But where some collateral matter arises out of the general words, and happens to be unreasonable, there the judges are in decency to conclude that this consequence was not foreseen by the Parliament, and therefore they are at liberty to expound the statute by equity, and only quoad hoc disregard it. Thus, if an act of Parliament gives a man power to try all causes that arise within his manor of Dale, yet, if a cause should arise in which he himself is party, the act is construed not to extend to that, because it is unreasonable that any man should determine his own quarrel. 8 Rep. 118. But, if we could conceive it possible for the Parliament to enact, that he should try as well his own causes as those of other persons, there is no court that has power to defeat the intent of the legislature, when couched in such evident and express words as leave no doubt whether it was the intent of the legislature or no. Id.

If an act of Parliament is clearly and unequivocally expressed, with all deference to the learned commentator, I conceive it is neither void in its direct nor collateral consequences, however absurd and unreasonable they may appear. If the expression will admit of doubt, it will not then be presumed that the construction can be agreeable to the intention of the legislature, the consequences of which are unreasonable; but, where the signification of a statute is manifest, no authority less than that of Parliament can restrain its operation. Id. Note by Christian.

When good in part, though bad in rest.

Where a clause void by statute law is mixed up with good matter, entirely independent of it, the good part stands, the rest is void. Horn v. Synge, 15 East, 440.

Conflicting decisions on construction.

But if the part which is good depends upon that which is bad, the whole instrument is void. Biddell v. Leeder, 1 B. & C. 327; 2 D. & R. 449, S. C.

Where there are conflicting decisions upon the construction of a statute, the court must refer to that which ought to be the source of all such decisions: that is, the words of the statute itself. Per Ld. Ellenborough, 16 East, 122.

The judges are to be the construers.

The power of construing a statute is in the judges of the temporal courts, who, in cases of doubtful construction, are to mould them according to reason and convenience, to the best use. Hob. 346; Plowd. 109; 3 Rep. 7. Effect of wrong construction.

It seems that, if the weight of authority be in construing an act of Parliament one way, however wrong that way may be, the courts are bound by it. See Booth v. Ibbotson, 1 Y. & J. 360; 1 Bla. Com. 91.

Commissioners of the navy, ordnance, &c. may sell any of the said stores so marked, &c. Sect. 4. The presumption of the malus animus, arising from the bare fact of possession of the goods may, of course, be rebutted by circumstances. 2 E. P. C. 765; Coll. Statutes, 112, note, post, p. 656, 657.

By the 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 25, s. 3, any of the principal officers or commissioners of the navy may issue warrants to search for naval stores, as justices may in cases of felony, and punish the offenders by fine not exceeding 20s., or imprisonment not exceeding one week, the value of the goods not exceeding 20s.; and if the offence requires a higher punishment, may commit him to the next gaol or to the custody of their messenger, till he finds surety or sureties to appear in the Exchequer, or other court, where the king shall question him for the same within one year, on process duly served for that purpose on such offender.

Sect. 6. And every person who shall counterfeit the hand of the treasurer, controller, surveyor, clerk of the acts, or of any commissioner of the navy, or the hand of the signing or vouching officer of his majesty's navy, ships, or yards, to any bill, ticket, or papers, by virtue whereof his majesty's naval treasure may be disposed of, or knowingly produce the same, he may be committed to prison by the said officers and commissioners, or any of them, until he find surety to appear at the next assizes or quarter sessions, to be there proceeded against according to law.

By the 9 Geo. I. c. 8, s. 3, reciting that, by the 9 & 10 Wil. III. c. 41, "a penalty of 200*l.*, with costs of prosecution and pain of imprisonment, is inflicted upon persons having in their custody, possession, or keeping, or concealing, contrary to the said act, any warlike, naval, or ordnance stores therein mentioned, or any other stores marked with the broad arrow, by stamp, brand, or otherwise: and whereas it is necessary to give power to mitigate the said penalties, and to explain and amend the said act," it is enacted, "that if any person or persons shall be lawfully convicted of having in his, her, or their custody, any timber, thick stuff, or plank, marked with the broad arrow, by stamp, brand, or otherwise, or of concealing any timber, thick stuff, or plank, so marked, every such person so offending shall suffer, forfeit, and pay, as for having, keeping, or concealing any other warlike, naval, or ordnance stores contrary to the said act."

Sect. 4. Decisions thereon.

Under this act the court have authority to adjudge the offender to suffer corporal punishment, although he be ready and offer to pay the penalty of 200*l.* Bland's case, 2 E. P. C. 760; 5 T. R. 370. In this case the defendant's counsel contended that, as their client could pay the penalty, the court had no authority to inflict corporal punishment. But the court said that the words of the statutes were in the disjunctive, enabling them either to impose a penalty, or to punish the offender corporally; and that this construction had already been put on the statutes in several instances, particularly in the case of R. v. Newell, M. 33, G. 3. And this appearing to the court to be a gross case, they sentenced the defendant to Clerkenwell Prison for three months, there to be kept to hard labour, and during that time to be publicly whipped on Clerkenwell Green for the space of 100 yards.

Though there was no instance prior to Trinity term, 46 Geo. III., in which the defendant had been ordered to pay the costs, the Court of King's Bench adjudged the defendant (A. Chapple) to pay the penalty of 200*l.*, together with the costs. 5 T. R. 371, (note a.)

The power of sentencing to hard labour is considered to be taken away by the 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 69, s. 2. R. v. Bridges, 8 East, 53. The defendant was brought up to receive judgment after conviction on the 9 & 10 Wil. III. c. 41, s. 2, for unlawfully having in his possession naval stores, &c., and judgment was about to be pronounced that he should be imprisoned in the house of correction for the county of Surrey, and there kept to hard labour for three calendar months, and once during that time publicly whipped. This would have been warranted by the 17 Geo. II. c. 40, s. 10, reciting the 9 & 10 Wil. III. c. 41, and 9 Geo. I. c. 8; but a doubt occurring how far the power of sentencing to hard labour was taken away by the subsequent stat. 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 89, s. 2, the court, upon further consideration and comparing the different provisions of these statutes, were of opinion that the power of sentencing to hard labour was taken away by the latter statute, and therefore pronounced judgment that the defendant should be imprisoned in the house of correction for the county of Surrey for three calendar months, and be once during that time publicly whipped.

The 21st section of this act relates to the power of appeal; see the enactment, ante, Cordage, Vol. I.

By the 54 Geo. III. c. 60, after reciting that "the marks usually put to his majesty's cordage are frequently taken out of the same for the purpose of concealing his majesty's property therein; and it is expedient that other marks should be used in his majesty's cordage for the purpose of denoting his majesty's property therein;" it is enacted, "that from and after the passing of this act, all and every the pains, penalties, forfeitures, regulations, restrictions, powers, provisions, matters, and things, in respect to the making, selling, delivering, receiving, having in possession, and concealing any cordage wrought either with a white thread laid the contrary way, or with a twine laid to the contrary way, mentioned and contained in 9 & 10 Wil. The 55 Geo. III. c. 127, recites the 9 & 10 Wil. III. c. 41; 9 Geo. I. c. 8; 17 Geo. II. c. 40; 40 Geo. III. c. 89; 52 Geo. III. c. 12; 53 Geo. Stealing or embezzling king's stores, transportation or imprisonment.

By the 4 Geo. IV. c. 53, it is enacted, "that, from and after the passing of this act, every person who shall be lawfully convicted of stealing or embezzling his majesty's ammunition, sails, cordage, or naval or military stores, or of procuring, counselling, aiding, or abetting any such offender, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour in the common gaol or house of correction for any term not exceeding seven years." See the 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 25, s. 3, ante, p. 655, as to summary punishment.

By the annual Mutiny Act, certain persons in the army, guilty of any of the offences aforesaid, may be tried and punished by a court-martial.

Decisions on statutes.

Habiliments extend to harness, and all utensils that belong to war. 3 Inst. 79.

Embezzle, &c., to the Value of 20s.—Though the statute 31 Eliz. c. 4, only spoke of embezzling or stealing stores to the value of 20s., still any of the officers who had a bare charge of the stores in the king's warehouses, or a mere authority to deliver them out, may be guilty of felony at common law in stealing them, to any amount, from such places of deposit. Accordingly, in Thorne's case, 2 East's P. C. 622, where it appeared that the prisoner was foreman of one of the storehouses in Plymouth Dock, containing naval stores, and had given security in 200*l.* for the faithful discharge of his duty, and was entrusted with the receiving and delivering out again of the stores in the absence of the clerk, whose proper duty it was, when present; and that certain kersey was cut off by him from a bale in the stores, and delivered by him to an accomplice to be taken out of the yard, though the value were under 20s., he was, by the direction of the court, convicted of larceny at common law in stealing the kersey.

Receive or have in his Possession].—Under the statutes for protecting the king's stores, the king's mark denotes the original ownership; and there the onus probandi lies on the party to account satisfactorily for his possession, according to the regulations prescribed; otherwise, the bare fact of possession concludes him. But even here the presumption of the malus animus arising from the bare fact of possession may be rebutted by circumstances, as in the following case:—A widow woman was indicted before Mr. Justice Foster, upon the western circuit, on the 9 & 10 Wil. III. c. 41, for having in her custody divers pieces of canvass, marked with the king's mark, in the manner described in the act, she not being a person employed by the commissioners of the navy to make the same for the king's use. The canvass was marked as charged in the indictment, and was clearly proved to be such as was made for the use of the navy, and to have been found in the defendant's custody. The defendant did not attempt to show that she was within any exception of the act, as being a person employed to make canvass for the use of the navy; nor did she offer to produce any certificate from any officer of the crown, touching the occasion and reason of such canvass coming into her possession. Her defence was, that when there happened to be in his majesty's stores a considerable quantity of old sails, no longer fit for that use, it had been customary for the persons entrusted with the stores to make a public sale of them in lots, larger or smaller, as best suited the purpose of the buyers; and that the canvass produced in evidence, which happened to have been made up long since, some for table-linen and some for sheeting, had been in common use in the defendant's family a considerable time before her husband's death; and, upon his death, came to the defendant, and had been used in the same public manner by her to the time of the prosecution. This was proved by some of the family, and by the woman who had frequently washed the linen. This sort of evidence was strongly opposed by the counsel for the crown, who insisted that, as the act allows of but one excuse, the defendant, unless she could avail herself of that, could not resort to any other; that, if the canvass were really bought of the commissioners, or of persons acting under them, there ought to have been a certificate taken at the time of the purchase; and the second section admits of no other excuse. But the judge was of opinion, that though the clause of the statute, which directs the sale of these things, had not pointed out any other way for indemnifying the buyer than the certificate, and though the second section seemed to exclude any other excuse for those in whose custody they should be found, yet still the circumstances attending every case which might seem to fall within the act ought to be taken into consideration; otherwise, a law calculated for wise purposes might, by too rigid a construction of it, be made a handle for oppression. There was no room to say that this canvass came into the possession of the defendant by any act of her own: it was brought into family use in the lifetime of her husband, and it continued so to the time of his death; and by act of law it came to her. Things of that kind had been frequently exposed to public sale; and, though the act pointed out an expedient for the indemnity of the buyers, yet, probably, few buyers, especially where small quantities had been purchased at one sale, had used the caution suggested to them by the act. And if the defendant's husband really bought the linen at a public sale, but neglected to take a certificate, or did not preserve it, it would be contrary to natural justice, after such a length of time, to punish her for his neglect. He therefore thought the evidence given by the defendant proper to be left to the jury; and directed them, that if, upon the whole evidence, they were of opinion, that the defendant came to the possession of the linen without any fraud or misbehaviour on her part, they should acquit her; and she was accordingly acquitted. *Post. An indictment, Winchester, March, 1801, cor. Le Blanc, J., 2 East's P. C. 767, charged that Thomas Cole, on the 28th January, 1801, unlawfully, willingly, and knowingly did receive and have in his custody, possession, and keeping, certain naval stores of the king, being all marked with the broad arrow, he not being a contractor, &c., against the statute, &c. The jury found the prisoner guilty; but said they did not find that he received the stores after the 28th July, 1800, but only that he had them in his possession after that day. Judgment was thereupon respited to take the opinion of the judges, a majority of whom inclined to think, that the statute was to be construed in the disjunctive, and the word or (receive or have) not to be taken as and; but, because of the disagreement of some, and that the case was not likely to occur again, the prisoner, on the finding of the jury, was recommended to mercy. It seemed, however, to be agreed that the case was not within the 9 & 10 Wil. III. c. 41, because the goods were not charged to have been found in the prisoner's possession.

A defendant against whom the possession of stores is proved, may discharge himself by other evidence than that of a navy-board certificate; as will appear from the case of R. v. Banks, 1 Esp. 144, wherein Lord Kenyon, C. J., said, that though in prosecutions under the statutes 9 & 10 Wil. III. c. 41, and 17 Geo. II. c. 40, s. 10, it was sufficient for the crown to prove the finding of the stores with the king's mark in the defendant's possession, to call upon him to account for that possession and the manner of his coming by them, so as to throw the onus upon the defendant, of proving that he had legally become possessed of them; yet, that the defendant had other means of showing that he had lawfully become possessed of them than by the production of the certificate from the Navy Board: as, for example, he might show that he had bought them from another person who was in the practice of buying stores at the navy sale; and who, therefore, might fairly be presumed to have had the regular certificate, but who, when he sold part to the defendant, could not, consistently with his own safety, part with the certificate he had obtained, of his having been the purchaser of the whole lot.

Summons.

Summons, where proper.

IN all legal proceedings, the person complained of ought to have notice of the charge laid against him, and to have an opportunity of being heard in his own defence. Consequently, where a person is accused before the justices, they ought to summon the party to appear, or issue their warrant to bring him before them. The manner of conveying the parties is sometimes directed by the acts of Parliament creating the respective offences, which, therefore, ought to be pursued accordingly. In other cases, where it is left discretionary in the justices, it seemeth most agreeable to the mildness of our laws to put the party to no more inconvenience than needs must; and, therefore, where the case will bear it, a summons seems more apposite than a compulsory process.

But, in cases of sureties of the peace, petty larcenies, and other felonies, and generally where the king is a party, and also in cases between party and party, where the body of the offender is liable, a warrant is the regular process, and not a summons. Warrant, where proper.

In some cases, a party may be apprehended without either a summons or warrant. See Arrest, Vol. I.

Surety of the Peace.

OUT of the Latin word par, the Normans formed their pair, and we (out of Surety of the peace that) our peace. Lamb. 5.

Surety of the Peace is the acknowledging of a recognizance or bond to the king, taken by a competent judge of record, for keeping the peace. Dalt. c. 116.

And this surety of the peace every justice of the peace may take and command by a twofold authority: 1. As a minister, commanded thereto by a higher authority; as, when a writ of supplicavit directed out of the Chancery or King's Bench is delivered to him. 2. As a judge, and by virtue of his office, derived from his commission. Dalt. c. 116. And, by the first clause of the commission, justices in session may take surety for the peace. Who may take it.

XI. How such Recognizance may be discharged, p. 679.

I. For what Cause granted.

For what cause to be granted.

By the commission of the peace, justices of peace have power to cause to come before them, or any one of them, all those who, to any of the king's people, concerning their bodies, or the firing of their houses, have used threats, to find sufficient security for the peace, or their good behaviour towards the king and his people; and, if they shall refuse to find such security, to cause them in the king's prisons to be safely kept, until they shall find such security. See the form of the commission, Vol. III. p. 449.

Fear of corporal
his house.

Upon which Mr. Hawkins observes, that it seemeth clear that, wherever a person has just cause to fear that another will burn his house, or do him a corporal hurt,—as, by killing or beating him, or that he will procure others to do him such mischief, he may demand the surety of the peace against such person; and that every justice of the peace is bound to grant it, upon the party's giving him satisfaction upon oath that he is actually under such fear, and that he has just cause to be so, by reason of the other's having threatened to beat him, or laid in wait for that purpose; and that he doth not require it out of malice or for vexation. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 6; see Butt v. Conant, 1 B. & B. 548, the case a libel.

Being threatened
ment.

Also, it seems the better opinion, that he who is threatened to be imprisoned by another has a right to demand the surety of the peace: for every unlawful imprisonment is an assault and wrong to the person of a man. And the objection that one wrongfully imprisoned may recover damages in an action, and therefore needs not the surety of the peace, is as strong in the case of battery as imprisonment; and yet there is no doubt but that one threatened to be beaten may demand the surety of the peace. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 7.

Where demanded through malice or vexation.

But, if the justice shall perceive that surety is demanded merely of malice, or for vexation only, without any just cause or fear, it seemeth he may safely deny it. Dalt. c. 116.

Implied malice is no ground for granting the sureties: direct malice must be shown from particular facts.

Also, if a man will require the peace, because he is at variance or in suit with his neighbour, it shall not be granted. Dalt. c. 116.

Fear of harm to his servants or cattle.

Also, Mr. Lambard says, he takes it to be somewhat clear that a justice may not by the commission award a precept of the peace in behalf of a man that will require it, because he feared that he will do harm to his servants or cattle. Lamb. 83.

And Mr. Dalton says, where a man is in fear that another will hurt his servants, or his cattle, or other goods, this surety of the peace shall not be granted by the justice. But, in this case, Fitzherbert saith, the party may have a special writ out of the Chancery directed to the sheriff, that he shall cause such person to find surety that he shall do no hurt or damage to the other man in his body, or to his servants or goods; and, if he will not find surety, that then he shall arrest and detain him in prison until he shall find surety. Dalt. c. 116.

The reason why a man may not have sureties of the peace against another, for that he feareth he will do harm to his servants, seemeth to be, because it should be the servant's fear in such case, and not the master's; and the servant's own oath before the justice is necessary. And as to his goods, it seemeth clear that no sureties of the peace ought to be granted in that case: for the recognizance of the peace, when taken, is only that the party shall keep the peace towards the king and all his liege people.

But Mr. Dalton says, that if a man shall threaten to hurt his wife or child, he thinks he may crave the peace at the justice's hands, by the words of the commission, and that the justice ought to grant it. Dalt. c. 116.

Threatening a man's wife or child.

Must be a fear of present or future danger.

Note, also, the surety of the peace shall not be granted but where there is a fear of some present or future danger, and not merely for a battery or trespass that is past, or for any breach of the peace that is past; for this surety of the peace is only for the security of such as are in fear; but the party wronged may punish the offender by indictment, and the justice, if he see cause, may bind over the affrayer. Dalt. c. 11. That is, he may bind him over to answer unto the indictment.

II. At whose Request granted.

As to this, Mr. Hawkins says, it seems to be agreed at this day, that all persons whatsoever, under the king's protection, being of sane memory, whether they be natural and good subjects or aliens, or attainted of treason, &c., have a right to demand surety of the peace. And it is certain a wife may demand it against her husband threatening to beat her outrageously, and that a husband also may have it against his wife. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 2; Cromp. 118.

May be demanded by any person.

Upon which Mr. Crompton observeth, that if the wife, in such case, cannot find sureties, she shall be committed; "and so (says he), a man may be rid of a shrew." Crompt. 118. (a)

And Mr. Dalton says, an infant under the age of fourteen years may demand this surety, and it shall be granted to him. Dalt. c. 117.

But, as to a person of non-sane memory, Mr. Dalton says, this surety shall neither be granted against him nor to him, upon his own request; but yet, if there shall be cause, the justice ought to provide for his safety. Dalt. c. 117.

A peeress may demand surety of the peace against her husband. See the cases of Lord Vane, 2 Stra. 1202; 13 East, 171; Marquis Carmarthen, Fort. 359; Earl Ferrers, 1 Burr. 631, 703; Earl Stamford, Cas. T. Harbo. 74; Lord Strathmore, 1 T. R. 696; Lord Howard, 11 Mod. 109.

III. Against whom granted.

There seems to be no doubt but that it ought, upon a just cause of complaint, to be granted by any justice of the peace against any person whomsoever, under the degree of nobility, being of sane memory, whether he be a magistrate or private person, and whether he be of full age or under age. But infants and *femes covert*s ought to find security by their friends, and not to be bound themselves. And the safest way of proceeding against a peer is by complaint to the Court of Chancery or King's Bench. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 3; 4 Bla. Com. 253. See, ante, Peers.

Against whom.

Peers.

IV. By whom and how granted.

The Courts of Chancery or King's Bench, or any justice or other conservator of the peace, may, it should seem, compel surety of the peace.

Who may compel it.

If a person require immediate surety of the peace, and there be no sessions sitting, he should go before a justice or justices out of session, and make complaint on oath of the facts which require the surety. The complaint is usually in writing. See form, (No. 1,) post, p. 688.

Before a single justice.

If the offending party be present, he may be required at once to enter into the requisite recognizance.

If he be absent, the justice may make out a warrant to bring the party before himself or some other justice, or he may make it to bring the party before himself only: for he that maketh the warrant, for the most part, hath the best knowledge of the matter, and therefore he is the fittest to do justice in the case. 5 Rep. 59. See form of warrant, post, (No. 2), p. 688.

It seemeth certain, that if the person to be bound be in the presence of the justice, he may be immediately committed, unless he offer sureties; and from hence it follows, à fortiori, that he may be commanded by word of mouth to find sureties, and committed for his disobedience. But it is said, that, if he be absent, he cannot be committed without a warrant from some justice, in order to find sureties, and that such warrant ought to be under seal, and to show the cause for which it is granted, and at whose suit, and that it may be directed to any indifferent person. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 9. See form of commitment, post, (Nos. 4, 5).

It is said, a justice cannot enjoin another to keep the peace under a penalty. Com. Dig. Nor commit him for not finding security, until the party has been required and refused so to do. Per Pratt, C. J., R. v. Wilks, 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 9, 7th edit. note.

It is more usual, and is considered as the better way, except under very special circumstances, for the justice to bind the party against whom the peace is required by recognizance to appear at the next session of the peace, and, in the meantime, to keep the peace to the king and all his liege people, especially to the party claiming the security; and, though the recognizance should be removed by certiorari, it is no discharge of the obligation to appear. 2 Haw. c. 27. The recognizance, however, may be to keep the peace for any indefinite period. Willes v. Bridger, 2 B. & A. 278. See, further, as to the form of the recognizance, post, p. 677.

sions.

The party requiring the surety may at once apply to the court of sessions; and this is the most usual and best course, when the court is sitting.

The application should be made to the court upon articles on oath (or on the affirmation of a Quaker), stating fully all the facts which justify the applicant in his fearful apprehensions. See form, post, p. 688, (No. 1).

The articles should be exhibited on parchment.

If the applicant has already been before a justice out of sessions, and the defendant has been bound by recognizance to appear before the justices in session, the court may make proclamation, that "if any man can show cause why the peace granted against such a one shall be continued, he shall speak;" and if no person come to demand the peace against him, or to show cause why it should be continued, then the court may discharge him. Dalt. 120.

It is said, that if a man be bound to keep the peace, and especially if to keep it towards a certain person, though such person come not to desire the peace may be continued, yet the court, by their direction, may bind him over till the next session, and that may be to keep the peace against that person only, if they shall think fit: for it may be that the person who first craved the peace is sick, or otherwise prevented, so as he cannot come to that session to demand the continuance of the peace further. Talf. Dick. Sess. 404. The power of the sessions, however, to do this seems questionable. In R. v. Bowes, where Lady Strathmore had exhibited articles of the peace against the defendant (her husband), the Court of King's Bench ordered him to give security for fourteen years (it being a case of great outrage, and articles of the peace having been once before exhibited against him on a different complaint), himself in 10,000*l.* and two sureties in 5000*l.* each. The defendant afterwards applied to the court to reduce the time to one year instead of fourteen, and also to diminish the sum; and in the course of the argument in support of the rule, the defendant's counsel suggested that the court might take bail for one year at first, and afterwards renew that from year to year, if they should see occasion, without any fresh facts being exhibited against him. But though the court, on the particular circumstances of the case, ordered the time to be reduced to two years, because an information then depending for the outrage complained of would be disposed of within that time, when the court might deal with the defendant as they thought proper, in the event of his being convicted, Mr. J. Ashurst, in answer to the suggestion at the bar, that new bail might be required of the defendant at the end of the first year on the original complaint, said, "I very much doubt whether we have such a power.

It has been admitted that there never was any instance of the kind ; and I confess I should be very loath to establish such a precedent." 1 T. R. 700.

If the applicant appear, he may then move the court to receive articles of the peace against the offender (with which articles ready drawn on parchment, (see form, post, No. 10,) he should come prepared, in order that they may be delivered to the clerk of the peace), and further, to bind him by recognizance to the next session ; and so on from session to session, so long as he shall be able to make it appear that his reasonable apprehensions continue. Or the justices may bind him for a certain definite period, without reference to any succeeding session, at their discretion, as the individual justice might have done in the first instance. Ante, 674 ; Talf. Dick. Sess. 405.

If the party refuse to enter into the recognizance, he may be committed. Ante, p. 674.

As to granting process of the peace or good behaviour out of the Chancery or the King's Bench, it is enacted, by the 21 Jac. 1. c. 8, that it shall not be granted but upon motion in open court, and declaration in writing, and upon oath to be exhibited by the party desiring such process, of the causes for which such process shall be granted ; the motion and declaration to be mentioned on the back of the writ. And if it shall afterwards appear that the causes are untrue, the court may order costs to the party grieved, and commit the offender till paid.

The articles must be verified by the oath of the exhibitant. R. v. Green, 1 Str. 527 ; Hilton v. Byron, 12 Mod. 243. Since the 9 Geo. IV. c. 32, the affirmation of a Quaker or Moravian would suffice. See Evidence, Vol. II. p. 86.

Verification on oath.

The articles may be supported by the corroboratory affidavits of third persons, and it is desirable so to support them. The affidavits ought not, it seems, to be entitled with names, &c. there being no previous cause in court. R. v. Jones, 1 Str. 704 ; 3 T. R. 601 ; 6 T. R. 642. But affidavits in answer must. Id.

Affidavits in corroboration.

A person demanding sureties of the peace (whether it be in the first instance before a single justice for immediate security, or by exhibiting articles before the justices in session) swears only to his own apprehensions, of which no other person can form an adequate judgment ; from which it has been deduced by the judges, in many cases, as a general rule, that articles of the peace cannot be resisted on any ground, except by showing direct evidence of express malice ; such as declarations to that effect ; but not inferred malice, collected from general reasoning, or collateral circumstances ; and, moreover, that wherever particular facts of violence are stated by the complainant, it is not permitted for the defendant to controvert them ; for they must be taken to be true, till negated through the medium of an appropriate prosecution. Dick. Sess. 504. And see the cases of Lady Vane, Countesses Strathmore and Doherty, infra.

Affidavits in contradiction.

In R. v. Doherty, 13 East, 171, articles of the peace having been exhibited against the defendant by his wife, process issued thereon to enforce appearance ; and when he appeared in court with his sureties, his counsel tendered affidavits to the court in contradiction of the facts sworn to in the articles, for the purpose of discharging them. But the court were satisfied they could not receive affidavits on the part of the defendant to contradict the truth of the articles exhibited against him, and prevent his giving surety. And see Lord Vane's case, 13 East, 171, n.

But in R. v. Bringle, 13 East, 174, note, though it was refused the defendant to controvert the facts, yet an explanation was allowed of such parts of the articles as were ambiguous.

And where an application was made to the court to enforce the subsequent process, and the articles manifestly appeared, from the corroborated affidavit of the defendant, to contain malicious, voluntary, and gross perjury, the court resisted the application and committed the offender. R. v. Parnell, 2 Burr. 806 ; R. v. Hon. P. Mackenzie, 3 Burr. 1922.

The court will not in general receive articles of the peace if the parties live at a distance in the country, unless they have previously made application to a justice in the neighbourhood, and he has improperly refused to receive them. R. v. Waite, 2 Burr. 780.

And where articles of the peace were exhibited, and it appeared that the facts charged were done at Portsmouth, the court ordered an indorsement to be made upon the attachment of the peace, authorizing and directing any justice in that county to take the security there, specifying the particular sums wherein the principals and also their sureties should be bound. Hutt's case, 1 Bla. Rep. 233; 2 Burr. 1039, S. C.

On an affidavit that the defendant was seventy years of age, and unable to travel, a mandamus was granted to three justices in Brecon to take security on articles of the peace exhibited in the King's Bench. R. v. Lewis, 2 Str. 835.

V. How the Peace-Warrant may be superseded.

Finding sureties before arrest.

It is said, that if one who fears that the surety of the peace will be demanded against him, find sureties before any justice of the same county, either before or after a warrant is issued against him, he may have a supersedeas from such justice, which shall discharge him from arrest from any other justice at the suit of the same party, for whose security he has given such surety. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 14.

In which supersedeas it is not necessary to name either the sureties or the sums in which they are bound: but yet it is the better form to express them both. Dalt. c. 118.

Supersedeas in the Chancery or
K. B.

Also, it is said that an appearance upon a recognizance for the peace may be superseded, by finding sureties in the Chancery or King's Bench, and purchasing a writ, testifying the same; but this practice having been often abused, it is enacted, by the 21 Jac. I. c. 8, that no writs of supersedeas shall be granted out of the Chancery or King's Bench but upon motion in open court, and on such sufficient sureties as shall appear on oath to the court to be assessed in the subsidy-book at 5*l.* lands, or 10*l.* in goods; and unless it shall also first appear to the court, that the process of the peace or good behaviour is prosecuted against him, desiring such supersedeas bona fide, by some party grieved, in that court out of which the supersedeas is desired to be awarded. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 14.

VI. How the Peace-Warrant shall be executed.

By whom to be executed.

See in general, Warrant, post.

It can be executed only by the persons to whom it is directed, or some of them, unless it be directed to the sheriff, who may, either by parole or by precept in writing, authorize an officer sworn and known to serve it, but cannot empower any other person without a precept in writing. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 11.

Breaking open doors.

Where a person, authorized to arrest another who is sheltered in a house, is denied quietly to enter it, in order to take him, it seems generally to be agreed that he may justify breaking open the doors, (among other instances there stated) upon a capias from the King's Bench or Chancery, to compel a man to find sureties for the peace or good behaviour, or even upon a warrant from a justice of the peace for such purpose. 2 Haw. c. 14, s. 2.

But no one can justify the breaking open another's doors to make an arrest, unless he first signify to those in the house the cause of his coming, and request them to give him admittance. 2 Haw. c. 14, s. 1. See title House, Vol. III.; Warrant, post.

What justice to
ore.

If the warrant specially direct that the party shall be brought before the justice who made it, the officer ought not to carry him before any other; but if the warrant be general, to bring him before any justice of such place, the officer has the election to bring him before what justice he pleaseth, and may carry him to prison for refusing to find surety before such justice. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 13.

And if the party be carried before another justice, and not before him who issued the warrant, such other justice must take the surety, and bind him by recognizance, in all points, as the form of the precept doth require; and thereupon such other justice, having so taken surety of the peace, may and ought, upon request, to make his supersedeas to all officers, and to all other justices of the same county; and thereby the said party shall be discharged from finding other surety, and from any other arrest from the same cause; but by such supersedeas, the other justice cannot discharge the warrant of the first justice, until the party be bound indeed; nor give any other day to the party to appear. Dalt. c. 118.

If the warrant be in the common form, directing the officer to cause the party complained of to come before a justice to find sufficient surety, and if he shall refuse so to do, to convey him immediately to prison, without expecting any further warrant, until he shall willingly do the same, the officer who serves it, before he makes any arrest, ought first to require the party to go with him, and find sureties according to the purport of the warrant; but upon refusal to do either, that is, either to go before the justice or to find sureties, he may carry him to the gaol by force of the same warrant, without more. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 12; Dalt. c. 118.

And yet the constable or officer may bring him, in that case, before the justice; and if he refuse there to give sureties, he may commit him without further warrant or mittimus. 2 Hale, 112.

Nevertheless, notwithstanding these great authorities, it may not be convenient for the justice to leave so much to the constable's judgment, as to determine what shall or shall not be deemed a refusal to find such sureties; for that the constable is constituted a judge in such case by no law. And much less doth it seem advisable to require in the warrant, as is usual, that the constable shall carry the party to gaol, if he shall refuse to find sufficient sureties. It doth not appear how the constable can any way be deemed a competent judge of that; for it is certain that he cannot administer an oath to such sureties, or others, whereby to inform himself of such sufficiency.

If the officer do arrest the party, and do not carry him before the justice to find sureties; or, upon the refusal of the party, if the officer shall arrest him and do not carry him to the gaol; in both these cases the officer is punishable by the justices for this neglect, by indictment and fine at their sessions. And also the party arrested may have his action of false imprisonment for the arrest; for where the officer doth not pursue the effect of his warrant, his warrant will not excuse him of that which he hath done. Dalt. c. 118.

When the party cometh before the justice, he must offer sureties, or else the justice may commit him; for the justice needeth not to demand surety of him. Dalt. c. 118, 169.

If the justice was deceived in the sufficiency of the sureties, he or any other justice may afterwards compel the party to find and put in other sufficient sureties, and may take a new recognizance for the same. Dalt. c. 116, 119.

If the sureties die, the party principal shall not be compelled to find new sureties, Dalt. c. 119, because their executors and administrators are liable.

But if a man that was bound to keep the peace hath broken his bond, the justices ought, of discretion, to bind him anew. Lamb. 78.

But not until he be thereof convicted by due course of law; for, before conviction, he standeth indifferent whether he hath forfeited his recognizance or not. Crompt. 125.

VII. Form of a Recognizance for the Peace.

The form of the recognizance, when taken before a justice, is chiefly in the discretion of such justice. See form, post, (No. 6.)

A recognizance to keep the peace as to any person, for a year, or for life, or without expressing any certain time (in which case it shall be intended for life), or without fixing any time or place for the party's appearance, or without binding him to keep the peace against all the king's people in general, is good.

HOW RECOGNIZANCE FORFEITED.

1 Haw. c. 60, s. 15; and see this fully recognized in Willes v. Bridger, 2 B. & A. 278, S. C.

Recognition must be separate.

However, it is the most usual way for justices out of sessions to bind the party to appear at the next sessions of the peace, and in the meantime to keep the peace as to the king and all his liege people, especially as to the party.

The fear of one cannot be the fear of another; and, therefore, every recognizance must be separate. Pult. 18. But the Court of King's Bench have allowed three women to file joint articles of the peace against three men. R. v. Nettle, &c. 1 Haw. P. C. c. 60, note, 7th edit.

Supplicavit.

The form of a recognizance taken on a writ of supplicavit must depend on the terms of that writ.

VIII. How Recognizance shall be certified.

How to be certified.

If it be taken by force of a writ of supplicavit, it needs not be certified till the justice receive a writ of certiorari to that purpose. But if it be taken upon a complaint below, it must be certified, sent, or brought to the next sessions, by force of the 3 Hen. VII. c. 1, that the party so bound may be called. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 18.

IX. How Recognizance may be forfeited.

What is deemed no forfeiture.

There are divers things which may be done against the peace, and divers offences for which an indictment against the peace will lie, and yet the committing or doing such offence or act shall be no forfeiture of the recognizance for the peace; for that the act that shall cause a forfeiture of such recognizance must be done or intended unto the person as is aforesaid, or in terror of the people. Therefore, to enter into lands, where he ought to bring his action; or to disseise another of his lands; or to enter into lands or tenements with force, being without offer of violence to any man's person, and without public terror; or to do a trespass in another man's corn or grass; or to take away another man's goods wrongfully, so it be not from his person; or to steal another man's horse, or other goods feloniously, being not from his person: all these, and the like, are breaches of the peace, and yet these will make no breach of this recognizance, nor breach of the peace within the meaning of the commission of the peace. Dalt. c. 121.

What shall be a forfeiture.

But the recognizance is forfeited, if the party make default of appearance, and the same default shall be recorded. 3 Hen. VII. c. 1.

However, if the party have any excuse for his not appearing, it seems that the sessions are not bound peremptorily to record his default, but may equitably consider of the reasonableness of such excuse. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 18.

Case of sickness.

And Mr. Dalton says, in case of the sickness of the party, so that he cannot appear, he has known that the justices, upon due proof thereof, have forborne to certify or record such forfeiture or default; and that they have taken sureties for the peace of some friends of his present in court, until the next sessions; for that the principal intent of the recognizance was but the preservation of the peace. But he queries how this is warrantable by their oath. Dalt. c. 120.

Actual violence.

Also, there is no doubt but that it may be forfeited by any actual violence to the person of another, whether it be done by the party himself, or by others through his procurement: as, manslaughter, rape, robbery, unlawful imprisonment, and the like. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 20.

Threatening words.

Also, it hath been holden, that it may be forfeited by any treason against the king's person, and also by any unlawful assembly in terrorem populi, and even by words directly tending to a breach of the peace, as by challenging one to fight, or in his presence threatening to beat him. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 21.

Otherwise it is if the party be absent; and yet, if the party so bound shall threaten to kill or beat a person who is absent, and after shall lie in wait for him to kill or beat him, this is a forfeiture of the recognizance. Dalt. c. 121.

However, it seems that it shall not be forfeited by bare words of heat and choler, as calling a man a knave, teller of lies, rascal, or drunkard: for though such words may provoke a cholerick man to break the peace, yet they do not directly challenge him to it, nor does it appear that the speaker designed to carry his resentment any farther; and it hath been said that even a recognizance for the good behaviour shall not be forfeited for such words; from whence it follows, à fortiori, that a recognizance for the peace shall not. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 22.

HOW RECOGNIZANCE DISCHARGED.

Also, there are some actual assaults on the person of another, which do not amount to a forfeiture of such recognizance: as if an officer, having a warrant against one who will not suffer himself to be arrested, beat or wound him in the attempt to take him; or if a parent in a reasonable manner chastise his child; or a master his servant, being actually in his service at the time; or a schoolmaster his scholar; or a gaoler his prisoner; or even a husband his wife, as some say; or if one confine a friend who is mad, and bind and beat him, in such a manner as is proper in such circumstances; or if a man force a sword from one who offers to kill another therewith; or if a man gently lay his hands upon another, and thereby stay him from inciting a dog against a third person; or if a man beat another (without wounding him, or throwing at him a dangerous weapon,) who wrongfully endeavours with violence to dispossess him of his lands or goods, or the goods of another delivered to him to be kept, and will not desist upon his laying his hands gently on him, and disturbing him; or if a man beat, or (as some say) wound or maim one who makes an assault upon his person or that of his wife, parent, child, or master, especially if it appear that he did all he could to avoid fighting before he gave the wound; or if a man fight with or beat one who attempts to kill any stranger; or if a man even threaten to kill one who puts him in fear of death, in such a place where he cannot safely fly from him; or if one imprison those whom he sees fighting, till the heat is over. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 23, 24.

An actual assault in some cases does not amount to a forfeiture.

X. How the Recognizance, being forfeited, shall be proceeded on.

It is said, that the sessions cannot in any case proceed against the party for a forfeiture of his recognizance, either in respect of his not appearing, or breaking the peace; but that the recognizance itself, with the record of default of appearance, ought to be removed into some of the courts at Westminster, who shall proceed by scire facias upon such recognizance; and so it ought to be if it be presented by the jury or grand inquest, that the party hath forfeited his recognizance by breach of the peace. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 18; Dalt. c. 70.

How forfeited recognizance proceeded on.

XI. How Recognizance may be discharged.

He who is bound to the peace, and to appear at a certain day, must appear at that day and record his appearance, although he who craved the peace cometh not to desire that it may be continued; otherwise the recognizance cannot be discharged. Dalt. c. 120.

Discharged on appearance.

If the recognizance be made to keep the peace generally, without any time or day limited, it shall be construed to be during the party's life; and this the justice may do upon reasonable cause: but if such surety be so taken during the offender's life, neither the king, nor the justice, nor the party, can release or discharge it: and, therefore, the justice must be well advised, how he granteth such surety. Dalt. c. 119.

But it seems to be agreed, that it may be discharged by the death or demise of the king in whose reign it was taken, or of the principal party who was bound thereby, if it were not forfeited before. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 17.

By the death of the king.

Also it hath been holden, that it may be discharged by the release of the party at whose complaint it was taken, being certified together with it; but this may justly be questioned, because the recognizance is not to the subject but to the king, and consequently cannot be discharged by the subject, who is not a party to it: however, such a release will be a good inducement to the court to which such a recognizance shall be certified, to discharge it. Id.

It is certain that such a recognizance cannot be pardoned or released by the king before it be broken, because the subject hath a kind of interest in it; but being forfeited, then the king, and no other, may release and pardon the forfeiture. Id.

And it is said that the sureties are not discharged by their death, but that their executors continue to be bound as their testators were. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 17; Dalt. c. 120.

And if a man be bound to keep the peace towards the king and all his people, but not towards any person certain, and to appear at such a sessions, the court at that sessions may make proclamation, that if any man can show cause why the peace granted against such a one shall be continued, he shall speak; and if no person cometh to demand the peace against him, or to show cause why it should be continued, then the court may discharge him. But if a man be bound as aforesaid, and especially to keep the peace towards a certain person, there, though such person cometh not to desire the peace may be continued, yet the court by their discretion may bind him over till the next sessions, and that may be to keep the peace against that person only, if they shall think good; for it may be that the person who first craved the peace is sick, or otherwise letted, so as he cannot come to that sessions to demand the continuance of the peace further. Dalt. c. 120. Sed vide ante, p. 674.

Likewise, if the party be imprisoned for default of sureties, and after he that demandeth the peace against him happen to die, it seemeth the justice may make his liberate or warrant for the delivery of such prisoner; for, after such death, there seemeth no cause to continue the other in prison. Also, any justice may, upon the offer of such prisoner, take surety of him for the peace, and may thereupon deliver him. Dalt. c. 118.

Good behaviour includeth the peace.

A MAN may be compelled to find sureties both for the good behaviour and for the peace; and yet the good behaviour includeth the peace; and he that is bound to the good behaviour is therein also bound to the peace. Dalt. c. 122.

This surety for the good behaviour being of near affinity to surety for the peace, both as to the manner in which it is to be taken, superseded, and discharged, it seemeth not to require a particular consideration, save only as to these two points:

I. For what Misbehaviour it is to be required, p. 680.

II. For what it shall be forfeited, p. 688.

I. For what Misbehaviour it is to be required.

For what misbehaviour it is to be required.

It doth not appear that the conservators of the peace at common law had any power as touching the good behaviour, further than as it had a relation to the peace; and not as it is contra-distinguished from it. And it seemeth that the power which the justices of the peace do exercise at this day, in relation thereto, doth solely depend upon the commission of the peace, and the statute of the 34 Edw. III. c. 1. (Except in some special instances, wherein the power of binding to the good behaviour is given to them by particular statutes, which pertain not to this general title.)

The words in the commission are these: "We have assigned you jointly and severally, and every one of you, our justices, to keep our peace, and to cause to come before you, or any one of you, all those who to any one or more of our people concerning their bodies, or the firing their houses, have used threats; to find sufficient security for the peace or their good behaviour towards us and our people; and if they shall refuse to find such security, then them in our prisons, until they shall find such security, to cause to be safely kept."

The 34 Edw. III. c. 1, as to this matter runs thus: "In every county shall be assigned for the keeping of the peace one lord, and with him three or four of the most worthy in the county, with some learned in the law; and they shall have power to restrain the offenders, rioters, and all other barrators, and to pursue, arrest, take, and chastise them according to their trespass or offence; and to cause them to be imprisoned and duly punished according to the law and customs of the realm, and according to that which to them shall seem best to do by their discretions and good advisement; and also to inform them, and to inquire of all those that have been pillors and robbers in the parts beyond the sea, and be now come again, and go wandering, and will not labour as they were wont in times past; and to take and arrest all those that they may find, by indictment, or by suspicion, and to put them in prison; and to take of all them that be not of good fame, where they shall be found, sufficient surety and mainprize of their good behaviour towards the king and his people, and the other duly to punish, to the intent that the people be not by such rioters or rebels troubled nor endangered, nor the peace blemished, nor merchants nor others passing by the highways of the realm disturbed, nor put in the peril which may happen of such offenders."

34 Edw. 3, c. 1.
Power given by statute.

This statute seems to have had in view chiefly the disorders to which the country was then liable, from great numbers of disbanded soldiers, who having served abroad in the wars of that victorious king, were grown strangers to industry, and were rather inclined to live upon rapine and spoil. Burl. 524.

But whatever the natural and obvious sense of it may be when compared with the history and circumstances of those times, it is certain that it hath been carried much farther by construction, and the purport of it hath been extended by degrees, until at length there is scarcely any other statute which hath received such a largeness of interpretation.

And that I may proceed with clearness in a matter so essential to the office of a justice of the peace, I will set down the several expositions which have been given of this statute from time to time by learned men, and then raise such observations thereupon as the subject will naturally suggest.

Observations of

The first unfolding of the sense of this statute which has occurred, was in the case of Sir Richard Croftes and Sir Richard Corbet, in the second year of the reign of King Henry VII., wherein it was resolved by all the judges, for that purpose assembled, that he who is bound to the good behaviour ought not to do anything which shall be cause of breach of the peace, or to put the people in fear, dread, or trouble; and so shall be intended of all things which concern the peace: but not in misdoing of other things which touch not the peace. Yet a diversity was observed, between a breach of the peace and a breach of the good behaviour, for the peace is not broken without an affray or battery, but the good behaviour may be forfeited by the number of people a man has, and by their harness, or weapons, and the like, although they break not the peace. 2 Hen. VII. c. 2.

The second instance, and upon which much stress hath been laid, was in the 13th year of the same king. In trespass of assault, battery, and imprisonment at D., the defendant saith that one Alice B. had a house in the same town, and kept there suspicious people, to wit, of common bawdry, and that the plaintiff oftentimes resorted to the same house suspiciously with women of bad fame and name, whereby the constable of the same town required the defendant to aid him to arrest the plaintiff, to find surety of his good behaviour; whereby the defendant came with the said constable at the hour of twelve in the night, and him found suspiciously in the same place; whereupon he took him and put him in ward; and it was holden by all the justices to be a good justification; for they said, that it is lawful for every constable to take suspected persons, which wake in the night and sleep in the day, or that keep suspicious company. 13 Hen. VII. c. 10.

In the next place, Sir Anthony Fitzherbert, who lived in the reign of King Henry VIII., saith, that it seemeth that one justice may, by the commission, issue a warrant against a person to find surety of the good behaviour, by his discretion, as well as two justices may: and the words of the statute of the 34 Edw. III. are to the same effect. Otherwise, he says, damage may happen to some of the king's subjects, if the party be not attached, before that two justices have made the precept; yet, he says, the common usage is, to make such precept of the good behaviour in the name of two justices, and it is good to observe this direction. Fitz. 7; see Crompton. 122, 126.

In the next place, it is proper to take notice of a case adjudged in the Court of King's Bench, in the 30th of Queen Elizabeth, reported by Ld. Coke, 4 Inst. 181, which was thus:—At the sessions at Bridgewater, in the county of Somerset, one William King with sureties was bound by recognizance to appear at the next general sessions of the peace in the same county, and in the meantime to be of the good behaviour towards the queen and all her people. And after, at the next sessions, William King appeared, and was indicted for slanderous words spoken since his binding, to wit, for saying at one time to Edward Kyrton, Esq., “Thou art a pelter, thou art a liar, and hast told my lord lies.” And he was further indicted, that since the said recognizance, “the close of one John Wick with force and arms he broke and entered, and the cattle of the said John depasturing in the said close unlawfully vexed and chased.” And afterwards, at another time, he said to the said Kyrton, “Thou art a drunken knave.” Which indictment was removed into the King's Bench. And hereupon it was debated divers times, both at the bar and the bench, whether, admitting all that is contained in the indictment to be true, anything therein was, in judgment of law, a breach of the said recognizance. And it was resolved, that neither any of the words, nor the trespass, were any breach of the good behaviour, for that none of them did tend immediately to the breach of the peace; for though the said words, “Thou art a liar, thou art a drunken knave,” are provocations, yet they tend not immediately to the breach of the peace; as if William King had challenged Kyrton to fight with him, or had threatened to beat or wound him, or the like, these tend immediately to the breach of the peace, and are therefore breaches of the recognizance of the good behaviour. And this diversity (Ld. Coke says) was justly collected upon the coherence and context of the statute of the 34 Edw. III., whereby justices are assigned for keeping the peace, and to restrain the offenders, rioters, and all other barrators, and to chastise them according to their trespass and offence; and to inquire of pillors and robbers in the parts beyond the seas, and be now come again, and go wandering, and will not labour. And thus much for the punishment of offences against the peace after they be done. Then followeth an express authority given to justices, for prevention of such offences before they be done, namely, “and take of all them that be not of good fame” (that is, that be defamed and justly suspected that they intend to break the peace), “where they shall be found, sufficient surety and mainprize of their good behaviour towards the king and his people” (which must concern the king's peace, as is also provided by the words subsequent), “to the intent that the people be not by such rioters troubled or endamaged, nor the peace blemished, nor merchants nor others passing by the highways disturbed, nor put in peril that may happen of such offenders.” And as for the trespass: although every wrongful trespass is by force and arms, and against the peace, yet these are not taken to be such as shall make a breach of the good behaviour.

After this, Mr. Lambard, who wrote towards the beginning of the reign of King James the First, saith thus:—Surety of the good bearing is of great affinity with that of the peace, as being provided for preservation of the peace, as that other is; for in the commission of the peace they are both conveyed under one tract of speech, against such as threaten to hurt men's bodies, or fire their houses; which things (he says) are now commonly prevented by surety of the peace only. Lamb. 115.

And in the 2 Hen. VII. c. 2 (above recited), the surety of the good abearing is set forth in this point chiefly, that a man do nothing that may be cause of a breach of the peace; and that it doth not consist in the observation of things that concern not the peace; and that it should differ from surety of the peace in this, that where the peace is not broken without an affray, or battery, or such like, the surety may be broken by the number of a man's company, or by his or their weapons or harness.

And herewithal (he says) do also agree certain precedents in the King's Bench.

But all this notwithstanding, he thinks that a man may reasonably affirm, that the surety of good abearing should not be restrained to so narrow bounds.

In proof of which, he proceeds to comment on the above-mentioned statute of the 34 Edw. III., enabling the keepers of the peace "to take of them all that be not of good fame, where they shall be found, sufficient surety and mainprize of their good abearing towards the king and his people;" so that, if a man be defamed, he may, by virtue hereof, be bound to his good behaviour at the discretion of the justices. Now, the doubt resteth in this—to understand concerning what matters this defamation must be: and this (he thinks) may be partly gathered out of the said statute; for after it hath first given power to the wardens of the peace to arrest and chastise offenders (that is to say, against the peace, rioters, and barrators), then it willet them to "inquire of such as, having been robbers beyond the sea, were come over hither, and would not labour as they were wont;" and, lastly, it authorizeth them "to take surety of the good behaviour of such as be defamed," namely, for any of those former offences; for so it standeth well together that they should both punish such as have already so offended, and shall also provide that others shall not likewise offend.

But he says, the further this bond of the good abearing doth extend, the more regard there ought to be taken in the awarding of it; and therefore (says he) although the justices have power to grant it, either by their own discretion or upon the complaint of others, even as they may that of the peace, yet I wish rather that they do not command it but only upon sufficient cause seen to themselves, or upon the complaint of other very honest and credible persons.

And then being about to set forth the form of a warrant, and of a recognizance for the good behaviour, he says, "And here, forasmuch as one justice alone, and out of sessions, may both by the first clause of the commission, and also by the opinion of Fitzherbert, grant this surety of the good abearing (although the common practice be, that two such justices do join in that doing, whereof also Fitzherbert hath very good liking), I will not stick to set forth the common forms, as well of the precept as of the recognizance for the same, wherein if I shall use the names of two justices, you must take that to be done according to the common fashion, and not of any necessity in law. For as I would more gladly use the assistance of a fellow-justice in this behalf, if I may conveniently have it, so if that may not be gotten, I would not greatly fear, when good cause shall require, to undertake the thing myself alone."

"And besides this," he says, "you may see admitted by the opinion of the court, 13 Hen. VII., that if a man in the night season haunt a house that is suspected for bawdry, or use suspicious company, then may the constable arrest him to find surety for his good abearing; for bawdry is not merely a spiritual offence, but mixed and sounding somewhat against the peace of the land."

"And, therefore," says he, "it shall not be amiss at this day, in my slender opinion, to grant surety of the good abearing against him that is suspected to have begotten a bastard child, to the end that he may be forthcoming when it shall be born; for otherwise there will be no putative father found, when the justices shall, after the birth, come to take order for his punishment." Lamb. 119.

In the next place, Mr. Pulton, who lived about the same time with Mr. Lambard, writeth thus:—"The surety of the good abearing is ordained for the preservation of the peace, and it doth differ in nothing from that of the peace, but that there is more difficulty in the performance of it, and the party bound may sooner slide into the peril and danger of it. The surety of good abearing is most commonly granted in open sessions, or by two or three justices; or, upon a supplicavit, and great cause shown and proved, it is granted in the Chancery or King's Bench. And though one justice alone may grant it, if he will, yet it is seldom done so, unless it be to prevent some great, sudden, and imminent enormity or danger. The surety of the peace is most times taken at the request of one for the preservation of the peace chiefly against one. But the surety for the good abearing is oftentimes granted at the suit of divers, and those must be men of credit, and to provide for the safety of many; for the effect and purport thereof is, that the party bound shall demean himself well in his port, behaviour, and company, and do nothing that may be the cause of breach of the peace, or in putting the people in fear or trouble; and it is chiefly granted against common barrators, common rioters, common quarrellers, common peace-breakers, and persons greatly defamed for resorting to houses suspected to maintain incontinency or adultery, and against those that be generally feared to be robbers or spoilers of the king's people, or which do endamage, disturb, trouble, or put in peril passengers by the way." Pult. 18.

FOR WHAT

Afterwards, Mr. Dalton, who wrote towards the latter end of the reign of King James the First, says, "The surety of good behaviour is of great affinity with that of the peace, and is provided chiefly for the preservation of the peace; and is most commonly granted either in the open sessions, or by two or three justices out of sessions. Yet by the words of the commission, as also by the common opinion of the learned, one justice alone out of sessions may grant this surety of the good behaviour. But this is not usual, unless it be to prevent some great and sudden danger, especially against a man that is of any good estate, carriage, or report. And it shall be good discretion in the justices that they do not grant it, but either upon sufficient cause seen to themselves, or upon the suit or complaint of others, and the same very honest and credible persons." Dalt. c. 123.

In the next place, Mr. Hawkins, who wrote in the reign of King George the First, saith thus:—"There seem to have been some opinions that the statute, speaking of those that be 'not of good fame,' means only such as are defamed and justly suspected, that they intend to break the peace, and that it does not any way extend to those who are guilty of other misbehaviours not relating to the peace. But this seems much too narrow a construction; since the above-mentioned expression of persons of 'evil fame,' in common understanding, as properly includes persons of scandalous behaviour in other respects, as those who by their quarrelsome behaviour give just suspicion of their readiness to break the peace; and accordingly it seems always to have been the better opinion, that a man may be bound to his good behaviour for many causes of scandal, which give him a bad fame, as being contrary to good manners only: as for haunting bawdy-houses with women of bad fame; or for keeping bad women in his own house; or for speaking words of contempt of an inferior magistrate, as a justice of the peace, or mayor, though he be not then in the actual execution of his office; or of an inferior officer of justice, as a constable and such like, being in the actual execution of his office." 1 Haw. c. 61, s. 2.

"However, it seems the better opinion, that no one ought to be bound to the good behaviour for any rash, quarrelsome, or unmannerly words, unless they either directly tend to a breach of the peace, or to scandalize the government, by abusing those who are entrusted by it with the administration of justice, or to deter an officer from doing his duty; and therefore it seems that he who barely calls another rogue or rascal, or teller of lies, or drunkard, ought not for such cause to be bound to the good behaviour." 1 Haw. c. 61, s. 3.

"However," says he, "I cannot find any certain precise rules for the direction of the magistrate in this respect; and therefore am inclined to think, that he has a discretionary power to take such surety of all those whom he shall have just cause to suspect to be dangerous, quarrelsome, or scandalous; as of those who sleep in the day, and go abroad in the night; and of such as keep suspicious company; and of such as are generally suspected to be robbers, and the like; and of eves-droppers; and common drunkards; and all other persons, whose misbehaviour may reasonably be intended to bring them within the meaning of the statute, as persons of evil fame, who being described by an expression of so great latitude, seem in a great measure to be left to the judgment of the magistrate. But if he commit one for want of sureties, he must show the cause with convenient certainty." 1 Haw. c. 61, s. 4.

And thus the sense of the statute hath been extended not only to offences immediately relating to the peace, but to divers misbehaviours not directly tending to a breach of the peace; insomuch as it is become difficult to define how far it shall extend, and where it shall stop.

Mr. Dalton, in order to determine the same with some kind of certainty, hath (notwithstanding his opinion as above mentioned) inserted a number of instances, wherein sureties of the good behaviour may be granted; and they are these that follow: (a)

FOR WHAT REQUIRED.

Against whom sureties of the good behaviour
may be granted.

1. Against rioters.
 2. Barrators.
 3. Common quarrellers, and common breakers of the peace.
 4. Such as lie in wait to rob, or shall be suspected to lie in wait to rob, or shall assault, or attempt to rob another, or shall put passengers in fear or peril, or shall be generally suspected to be robbers by the highway.
 5. Such as are like to commit murder, homicide, or other grievances, to any of the king's subjects in their bodies.
 6. Such as shall practise to poison another; one instance of which may be the poisoning of their food. Thus, Mr. Dalton granted the good behaviour against one who had bought ratsbane, and mingled it with corn, and then cast it among his neighbour's fowls, whereby most of them died.
 7. Such as in the presence and hearing of the justice shall misbehave themselves in some outrageous manner of force or fraud.
 8. Such as are greatly defamed for resorting to houses suspected to maintain adultery or incontinency.
 9. Maintainers of houses commonly suspected to be houses of common bawdry.
 10. Common whoremongers and common whores; for bawdry is an offence temporal as well as spiritual, and is against the peace of the land.
 11. Night-walkers and eves-droppers.
 12. Suspected persons, who live idly, and yet fare well, or are well-apparelled, having nothing whereon to live; unless upon examination they shall give a good account of such their living.
 13. Common gamesters, especially if they have not whereon to live.
 14. Such as raise hue and cry without cause.
 15. Libellers.
 16. Putative father of a bastard child.
 17. Such as persuade or procure the putative father to run away, or the mother to be conveyed away, whereby she leaveth her child to the charge of the town.
 18. Such as abuse a justice's warrant, or shall abuse him or the constable in executing their offices. Nay, it seemeth, he says, that he who shall use words of contempt, or contrary to good manners, against a justice of the peace, though it be not at such a time as he is executing his office, yet he shall be bound to his good behaviour.
 19. Such as charge another before a justice with felony, riot, or forcible entry, and yet will not prosecute or give evidence.
 20. In general, whatsoever act or thing is of itself a misbehaviour, is cause sufficient to bind such an offender to the good behaviour. Dalt. c. 124.
- To which others have added other instances; as—
21. Forcible entry. 1 Haw. c. 64, s. 8.
 22. Mr. Hawkins says, "that he hath heard it agreed in the Court of King's Bench, that a writing full of obscene ribaldry, without any kind of reflection upon any one, is not punishable at all by any prosecution at common law; yet it seems," he says, "that the author may be bound to his good behaviour, as a scandalous person of evil fame." 1 Haw. c. 73, s. 9.
 23. A man did beat a woman in Westminster Hall, and he was bound to the good behaviour; and so, says Mr. Crompton, "he may be bound to the peace and good behaviour, where he striketh a person in the presence of the justices in sessions." Crompt. 124.

FOR WHAT

24. A man was bound to the good behaviour by the Court of King's Bench, for assaulting and threatening a person, so that he could not attend the court in suit there, without great cost. And so it seemeth that it may be done where one cometh to the sessions about a traverse to be tried there, or to prefer a bill of indictment, if he be assaulted or threatened. Crompt. 125.

Observations by Dr. Burn.

I have omitted to make any remarks in the progress of these authorities, being willing to exhibit them together in one view; I proceed now to take notice of such observations as do occur upon the whole.

First, it appears from hence, that the universal practice of one justice binding to the good behaviour is but of a modern date; although the law for it is the same now that it was near four hundred years ago; and that it was a long time doubted whether one justice alone could require sureties of the good behaviour. But here a distinction ought to be made between the power given by the commission of the peace and the power given by the above-mentioned statute: as to the commission, there seemeth to be no foundation for any doubt, but that thereby one justice alone may require such sureties; for the words are express, "We have assigned you, jointly and severally, and every one of you:" but then that extends only to two instances, namely, to "the threatening of a person concerning his body, or the firing of his house." As to the statute, the doubt seems to have arisen upon this; in that, having appointed who shall be assigned for justices, it then directeth that "they shall have power to restrain offenders;" and it is holden, Mr. Lambard hath observed, "that if no power be expressly given by any statute to any one justice alone, he cannot otherwise compel the observation thereof, than by the help of his fellow-justices." And Mr. Hawkins, speaking hereof in the case of riots, says, "that if one justice alone, proceeding upon this statute, shall arrest an innocent person as a rioter, it seemeth that he is liable to an action of trespass, and that the party arrested may justify the rescuing of himself; because no one single justice is by this statute made a judge of the said offence: yet, nevertheless," he says, "by a favourable construction which this statute hath received for the advancement of justice, it hath been resolved, that any one justice upon this statute, 'if he find the persons riotously assembled,' may, without staying for his companions, arrest the offenders, and bind them to their good behaviour."

Secondly, it seemeth, from what hath been rehearsed, that the words, "not of good fame," were generally understood for a long time to refer to such offences only as have a relation to the peace, and not to other things which concern not the peace.

Thirdly, that one great inlet to the larger, and at length almost unlimited interpretation of the words, was the case above mentioned, 13 Hen. VII., wherein it was adjudged to be lawful to arrest a man for the good behaviour, for frequenting a suspected bawdy-house, with women of bad fame. And this is the reason which Mr. Dalton gives for many of his instances above specified,—namely, that they are more properly against the peace than this same case of avourtry. Dalt. c. 124, p. 289.

Fourthly, That when once the gap was opened for the admission of other offences not immediately relating to the peace, they flowed in and multiplied. Thus, in the case of bastardy, having some affinity with the other, of frequenting bawdy-houses, Mr. Lambard thought that, with equal reason, the reputed father of a bastard child might be bound to the good behaviour; and, in a few years after, Mr. Dalton delivers it absolutely, that he may be so bound.

Fifthly, That, therefore, the natural and received sense of any statute ought not to be departed from without extreme necessity; for that one concession will make way for another, and the latter will plead for the same right of admission as the former.

Sixthly, That, notwithstanding the aforesaid instances given by Mr. Dalton and others, it may not be safe in all cases to rely upon every one of them without distinction; not only because it is almost impossible for any two cases to be exactly alike in all their circumstances, but also because in fact divers of them, at different times, have been adjudged otherwise, and others have not prevailed without much difficulty and contradiction in the courts above, and, perhaps, were at length admitted rather from the conveniency and reasonableness of the thing itself, and from an indulgence usually allowed to those gentlemen who serve their country without gain, and oftentimes with much trouble, than from any clear, positive, and express power given to them by the commission, or by the said statute.

Seventhly, That, notwithstanding all which hath been said, perhaps the case before recited, concerning the frequenting of a suspected bawdy-house, will not support the weight which so many authors have laid upon it. For the question, whether a justice of the peace had cognizance of the offence by virtue of the commission of the peace, or of the statute of the 34 Edw. III. was no part of the dispute; for it was an arrest by the constable ex officio, as a conservator of the peace at common law, and without any warrant from a magistrate; and the question was not whether the constable might require sureties for the good behaviour, as a thing different from sureties for the peace, but whether in that case he could arrest at all or not.

And if the authority of this case shall be abated, several of the above-mentioned instances will abate in proportion.

Eighthly, It is to be observed, that others of the above said instances were established upon matters originally determined in the Court of King's Bench, and Mr. Crompton himself refers to the authority and practice of that court in several instances. Crompt. 120. But it doth by no means follow, from what the justices of the Court of King's Bench may do, that the justices of the peace may do the like; for their authority is circumscribed and limited by their commission and the statute law.

Ninthly, That it will perhaps abate some other of the foregoing instances, if we attend to this consideration: that there is a great difference between what the justices in sessions may do, after a conviction by a jury, for an offence committed, and what a single justice out of the sessions may do, before an offence is committed, and to prevent the same from being committed; or what a single justice may do, upon a summary conviction before him, for an offence, as directed by some special act of Parliament. The truth is, binding to the good behaviour was a discretionary judgment at the common law, given by a court of record for an offence at the suit of the king, after a common law conviction by verdict of twelve men. Trial by his peers is the Englishman's birthright by the great charter, and cannot be taken away but by an authority equal to that which established it,—that is, by act of Parliament; and, therefore, where an act gives a summary conviction before a justice of the peace, and inflicts a punishment upon such conviction, such statute must be pursued both as to the conviction and punishment. And it seemeth incongruous, that a justice of the peace shall have power to bind a man to the good behaviour, for an offence which he himself hath no power to hear and determine; for that is, in effect, giving judgment, and awarding execution, when it doth not and cannot legally appear to him that the person is guilty.

Tenthly, That, therefore, upon the whole, it may be proper to conclude, that the magistrate, in this article of the good behaviour, cannot exercise too much caution and good advisement; that in matters which the law hath left indefinite, it is better to fall short of than to exceed his commission and authority; that to bind a man to the good behaviour upon the statute for evil fame in general may not always be with safety: not only because upon an action brought it may be hard to prove such evil fame, but also because in fact it is not always true, for many a good man hath been evil spoken of; that although, in some cases, a justice of the peace may have a discretionary power (as Mr. Hawkins expresseth it), yet he must remember withal that it is a legal discretion, as Mr. Barlow terms it, in which, in favour of liberty, great tenderness is to be used; or, as Lord Coke hath defined it, discretion is a knowledge or understanding to discern between truth and falsehood, between right and wrong, between shadows and substance, between equity and colourable glosses and pretences, and not to do according to our wills and private affections; and such discretion ought to be limited and bounded with the rules of reason, law, and justice. 5 Rep. 100; 10 Rep. 140. And see further as to this title, Justices, Vol. III. p. 465, 466.

Discretion defined.

II. For what it shall be forfeited.

For what forfeited.

This hath been handled in part as it fell in with the former section; and agreeably to the doctrine there laid down, Mr. Dalton says, that he who is bound to the good behaviour ought to demean himself well in his carriage, and in his company, not doing anything which shall be a cause of breach of the peace, or to put the people in fear, dread, or trouble; and so shall be intended of all things which concern the peace, but not in misdoing of other things which touch not the peace. Dalt. c. 122.

And Mr. Hawkins saith, it hath been laid down as a general rule, that whatever will be a good cause to bind a man to his good behaviour will forfeit a recognizance for it; but that this hath since been denied, and indeed seems by no means to be maintainable, because the statute, in ordering persons of evil fame to be bound in this manner, seems, in many places, chiefly to regard the prevention of that mischief which they may justly be suspected to be likely to do; and in that respect requires them to secure the public from that danger which may probably be apprehended from their future behaviour, whether any actual crime can be proved upon them or not; and it would be extremely hard in such cases to make persons forfeit their recognizances, who yet may justly be compellable to give one, as those who keep suspicious company, or those who spend much money idly, without having any visible means of getting it honestly, or those who lie under a general suspicion of being rogues, and the like. 1 Haw. c. 61, s. 5.

However, it seems that such a recognizance shall not only be forfeited for such actual breaches of the peace for which a recognizance for the peace may be forfeited, but also for some others, for which such a recognizance cannot be forfeited: as, for going armed with great numbers to the terror of the people, or speaking words tending to sedition; and also for all such actual misbehaviours which are intended to be prevented by such a recognizance, but not for barely giving cause of suspicion of what, perhaps, may never actually happen. 1 Haw. c. 61, s. 6.

Of Easter Term, in the [first] year of the reign of King [William the Fourth].

England. Articles of the Peace exhibited by C. B., wife of A. B., of , [gentleman], against the said A. B., her husband, through fear of death, or of receiving some great bodily harm.

[Here state the causes producing the fear; and the mode of stating them may be collected from the following matters:]

First. This exhibitant, on her oath, saith, that she hath been married to the said A. B. for the space of [six years and upwards]; and that, for the space of [one year and ten months] before the [1st day of November] last past, the said A. B. hath treated this exhibitant with great cruelty and barbarity, and without any provocation whatever from this exhibitant; and, in particular, hath frequently, during the time last aforesaid, struck and threatened to strike this exhibitant, and dragged her about his [dwelling-house].

Secondly. This exhibitant, on her oath, saith, that the said A. B., having made a voyage to the [East Indies], returned on or about the [29th day of September, A. D. 1806]; and, soon after his return, commenced or renewed an acquaintance with a woman who was known by the name of E., with whom, as well as with other women, the said A. B. frequently cohabited, as this exhibitant hath great reason to believe; this exhibitant having known the said woman called by the name of E. shut into the said A. B.'s [bed-room], where she hath remained with him several hours. And this exhibitant saith, that the said A. B. compelled this exhibitant to reside in mean lodgings, different from his place of residence; and that, whenever this exhibitant ventured to go to the said A. B.'s [chambers], to expostulate with him on his ill-treatment, he hath beaten or threatened to beat this exhibitant; and this exhibitant saith that, at one time in particular, during the time last aforesaid, the said A. B. did, with a violent blow, knock this exhibitant down in the said [chambers], and that this exhibitant, in consequence of the said blow, lay senseless for a considerable time.

Thirdly. This exhibitant, on her oath, saith, that, by means of the cruel treatment of the said A. B., before set forth, and particularly of his having, at divers times within the space of [three months] last past, as this exhibitant hath been informed and believes, threatened to seize, confine, beat, maim, or ill-treat this exhibitant, she, this exhibitant, is put into the utmost fear and danger, and verily believes that the said A. B. will put his said threats into execution, and will do this exhibitant some bodily hurt; and therefore this exhibitant is prevented from going out about her lawful occasions, until she can obtain that protection from the laws of this country which this honourable court has authority to grant. And this exhibitant further saith, that she is now under great fear and apprehension that the said A. B. will take the first opportunity of doing this exhibitant some bodily hurt, unless he is restrained therefrom by this honourable court; and therefore this exhibitant most humbly craves that the said A. B. may be ordered by this honourable court to find sufficient sureties for keeping the king's peace towards this exhibitant.

Lastly. This exhibitant saith, that she doth not make this complaint against the said A. B. through any hatred, malice, or ill-will, which she hath or beareth towards him, but merely for the preservation of her life, and also of her person from bodily harm.

The above-named C. B. was sworn to the truth of the above premises on [Saturday] next after , in the [first year of the reign of King William the Fourth].

Taxes, Assessed, &c.

IN the preceding parts of this work, the taxes called duties of Excise and Customs, Land Tax, Post-Horse Duty, and Stamp Duties, have already been considered. In the prior editions, as well as in the present, under the above head of Taxes, the other branches of revenue principally denominated Assessed Taxes are considered, together with the provisions relative to the commissioners of the affairs of taxes, and their inferior officers, and the regulations affecting the assessment, raising, levying, and paying these taxes, and the acts relating to compositions for taxes.

General observations.

Assessed Taxes consist of the duties on Windows or lights, on Inhabited Houses, on Servants, Carriages, Horses, Mules, and Dogs, Armorial Bearings, Game Certificates, and other the duties transferred to the commissioners for the affairs of taxes. The origin of some of these taxes is stated in 1 Bla. Com. 324, 325.

Before we proceed to divide and consider this subject, it may be useful to give, first, a list of the repealed or expired acts; secondly, a list of those acts still in force; and, thirdly, a list of those which relate to compositions for taxes:—

3. Appointment of Collectors, their Powers and Duties.

How collectors shall give security. (a)

Sect. 13. "That such persons as shall be presented to the said commissioners as before directed to be collectors, shall, if required so to do, give good and sufficient security to any two or more of such commissioners equal to the amount of the whole duty, and sum and sums of money assessed in, and to be collected in each district or place as aforesaid, by such collectors respectively, for their duly paying such monies assessed as aforesaid, as shall come to their hands, and for their duly demanding the sums assessed of the respective persons from whom the same are payable; and in case of nonpayment thereof, their duly enforcing the powers of this act against such who make default; which security the said commissioners, or any two or more of them, are hereby authorized and empowered to take, by a joint and several bond, with two sureties at the least, (b) to and in the names of any two or more of such commissioners, in penalties under the 43 Geo. III. c. 99, s. 12. Lister q. t. v. Priestley, Wightw. 405.

The 23 Geo. III. c. 90, s. 4, for paving and lighting the parish of St. Martin, which prohibits, under a penalty, any person, during the time he shall be collector of any tax, or hold any office or profit, or be interested in any contract or work to be done in the execution of that act, from acting as a committee-man under the act, does not extend to a collector of the assessed taxes. Lee v. Birreld, 1 M. & S. 482.

In a qui tam action against a collector of taxes, it is not necessary to give in evidence his warrant; proof that he has acted as collector is sufficient. Lister q. t. v. Priestley, Wightw. 67.

(a) By 48 Geo. III. c. 55, every collector is to have 3d. in the pound for money paid by him in due time, except duties in schedule L., &c.

(b) But a bond with one surety only is valid. See Peppin v. Cooper, 2 B. & A. 431. In the same case, it was held, that the due collection of the rates for one year was a compliance with the condition of the bond, under the particular terms of such bond. And although it appeared, from the condition of the bond, that H. A. and G. P. were both appointed collectors, it was held that such bond, being for the due collection by H. A. only, might be put in suit against the surety, without first selling the goods of G. P.

A joint collector of taxes is liable for any deficiency in the collection for the year, in the amount received by his coadjutor, although he has not himself collected during the time, and although his appointment may not have been quite formal, if he has in any manner acknowledged his appointment, or acted or received a share of the poundage at any time. And the court will set insuper on him, although a re-assessment has been made on the parish, and the amount of the deficiency collected, and paid over to the receiver-general. And if he should have procured a rule to be made absolute for discharging a former insuper, and for the restoration of the money levied under it by distringas, without having served the order nisi on the parish, the court discharging such a rule, will do so, with costs. In the matter of insupers set upon John Bromley and William Baylies, joint collectors of taxes for the parish of Welford, 5 Price, 5.

See, also, In re Moorty, 5 Price, 5.

It was held, if there be two collectors of taxes appointed under the 43 Geo. III. c. 99, s. 13, for a single parish, by the commissioners, one for one division of the parish, called the upper parish, and one for another, called the lower parish, and they accordingly collect the taxes separately from the several inhabitants of their respective divisions: in case of a deficiency in the amount of the taxes collected, through the misconduct of either, the whole parish must be re-assessed, and not the particular district, the collector of which has misapplied the money, and from the collection of whose taxes the deficiency arises, although the taxes of the other division such penal sum as aforesaid, and with a condition thereto to the effect before mentioned; and on failure of the persons so first named or appointed to be collectors giving such security, if required, the said commissioners, or any two or more of them, shall be at liberty and are hereby authorized to appoint any other sufficient persons, who can give such security as aforesaid, residing within the limit of the same district or place, to be collectors of the said duties respectively; and every such bond given by way of such security, as aforesaid, shall be prosecuted by such commissioners on any failure or default of the said collector or collectors: provided always, that no such bond shall be put in suit against any surety or sureties for any deficiency other than what shall remain unsatisfied after sale of the lands, tenements, goods, and chattels of such collector or collectors, in pursuance and by virtue of the directions and powers given to the respective commissioners by this act: provided also, that such bond shall not be subject to any stamp duty whatever: provided always, that if no persons can be found within the limits of such districts or places respectively, who are willing or able to give such security, then and in such case the persons who were first presented to the respective commissioners, as before directed, shall be collectors of the monies assessed as aforesaid, within the limits of such districts or places respectively."

43 Geo. 3, c. 80.

Sic in act.

Churchwardens, &c. or inhabitants of parishes, may require security to be taken from collectors, and name persons willing to give such security.

In which case no collectors shall be appointed until security be given.

Within the bills of mortality, St. Mary-le-Bone, and Pancras, the appointment of collectors to belong to the resident commissioners.

Where two or more commissioners shall not be resident, the commissioners of the adjacent parish, &c. may appoint or concur in the appointment of collectors.

Sect. 14. "That if any two or more of the inhabitants of the district or place for which a collector or collectors may be named as aforesaid, being respectively charged to any of the said duties to be assessed under the regulations of this act, or the churchwardens or overseers, or guardians of the poor of any description, or any two or more of them, or the select vestry, or any seven or more of them, where a select vestry shall be authorized to act for any parish or place, shall require security to be taken of the collector or collectors to be appointed for the parish or place on behalf of which such application shall be made, and shall name a fit and proper person or persons to be a collector or collectors who respectively are willing to give such security, it shall not be lawful for such commissioners to appoint collectors for such duties, or any of them, until such security be given; and if the person or persons returned to the said commissioners, according to this act, to be a collector or collectors, shall not have given, or shall not give such security, then it shall be lawful for such commissioners to appoint such persons, and no others, who shall have been named to them by the persons respectively before mentioned, as fit and proper persons to be collectors, and who will give such security as shall be required."

Sect. 15. "That within the bills of mortality, the parishes of St. Mary-le-Bone and St. Pancras, in the county of Middlesex, the appointment of the collectors of such duties as aforesaid shall belong wholly to such of the commissioners for executing this act, who shall reside in the wards or parishes for which such collectors respectively are to be appointed, in case there shall be two or more commissioners there resident, and no other commissioner shall in such case interfere; and it shall be lawful for such commissioners residing within the respective wards or parishes aforesaid, to appoint two or more persons to be collectors, who shall have given such security as aforesaid, whether such persons shall have been presented by the assessors as aforesaid, or named by the inhabitants, or churchwardens and overseers, or guardians of the poor, or any two or more of them, or any seven or more of the vestry, where a select vestry shall be appointed as aforesaid, and who shall be thought by such commissioners to be of ability to execute the office of collector; and that in default of presenting or naming such persons who shall be willing to give such security, then the said commissioners residing as aforesaid shall name such persons as they shall think of ability to execute the said office: provided always, that where two or more commissioners shall not be resident in any such ward have been collected, and paid over to the receiver-general. Ex-parte Heullan, 7 Price, 594. But in Barrs v. Digby, 1 New Rep. 281, it was held, that where a constablenick consisted of several hamlets, and two collectors of the duties on houses, &c., were appointed for each hamlet, if the collector or collectors of any one hamlet failed in duly paying over the money collected, the particular hamlet only where the collector or collectors have failed is liable to a re-assessment, under 20 Geo. II. c. 3, and not the whole constablenick.

43 Geo. 3, c. 90.

Collectors shall also act as assessors.

Assessors or collectors refusing to take the office, or neglecting their duty, may be fined by commissioners, not exceeding 20*l*. Inhabitants of cities, boroughs, &c. not compelled to be assessors or collectors out of the limits of such places.

His majesty or the treasury may from time to time appoint officers for the survey and inspection of or parish as aforesaid, for which collectors are to be appointed, then a commissioner or commissioners residing in any adjacent ward or parish in the same county or city, may appoint or concur with a commissioner so residing, in the appointment of such collectors; and every person appointed a collector in pursuance of this act, shall also, by virtue of such appointment, act as an assessor for the same parish, ward, or place."

Sect. 16. "That if any assessor or collector to be appointed as aforesaid, shall wilfully neglect or refuse to take upon himself the office of an assessor or collector, to which he shall be appointed, or shall wilfully neglect or refuse to perform his duty in the due and speedy execution of this act, or of any act or acts granting duties to be assessed under the regulations of this act, for which he shall be appointed an assessor or collector, such commissioners, or any two or more of them, may and shall, by virtue of this act, impose on such person or persons so refusing or neglecting, for every such offence, a fine not exceeding 20*l*.: provided, that no person inhabiting any city, borough, or town corporate, shall be compelled to be an assessor or collector for any part of such duties, in any place or places out of the limits of the city, borough, or town corporate, in which he shall so inhabit."

Sect. 17. "That in all privileged and other places being extra-parochial, and not within the constablewicks or precincts of the respective assessors to be appointed as aforesaid, and in all parishes and places where two able and sufficient inhabitants cannot be found, the said commissioners, or any two or more of them, shall and they are hereby required to nominate and appoint two fit persons, living in or near the said privileged or other places as aforesaid, to be assessors for the said places, and to make and return their said assessments in like manner as by this act is directed, in any parish or place, and also in like manner and in the like cases to appoint one or more collector or collectors, who are hereby required to collect and pay the sums given to them in charge, according to the rules prescribed by this act, for collecting and paying the sums of money assessed in any parish or place."

Sect. 19. "That no commissioner, assessor, or collector, who shall be employed in the execution of any such act or acts herein mentioned, or of this act, shall be liable, for or by reason of such execution, to any penalty or penalties, other than such as by this act, or the said act or acts, are or may be inflicted."

year, with full power to collect the arrears of the sums then due; and it shall also be lawful for such commissioners, whenever the same shall be necessary, to revoke such last-mentioned appointment, and to appoint a collector or collectors in like manner, from time to time, and as often as any such collector or collectors shall be guilty of such default or neglect, provided security be taken, if required, as in the case of an original appointment, and provided the like security be taken on every such new appointment as shall have been required to be taken on the appointment of collectors at the commencement of any year, as hereinbefore is mentioned; and such collector or collectors so in default as aforesaid, shall, on the demand of such commissioners, deliver up to them, or in their presence, to the collector or collectors newly appointed, all such certificates of assessments which he or they were charged to collect, and all accounts of receipts and vouchers of payment as aforesaid, and also shall pay to the receiver-general all sums then in his or their hands, at such time as such commissioners shall appoint; and if any person, after such removal from the office of collector, shall refuse or neglect to do any matter or thing required by this act, every such person shall forfeit and pay the sum of 50*l.*, to be charged in any assessment of such duties as aforesaid, for such parish, ward, or place, and recovered as such assessment may be recovered, and shall also remain liable to such other forfeitures and disabilities that may be incurred by virtue of this act, for detaining the said monies in his hands after such demand made of the same as aforesaid."

43 Geo. 3, c. 50.

Collectors dismissed to deliver, on demand of the commissioners, to the new collector, the certificates of assessments, &c., or in default to forfeit 50*l.*

Sec. 41. That if any collector, being duly summoned, shall refuse to attend such respective commissioners, or shall not answer all such lawful questions as shall be demanded of him by such commissioners, touching the execution of his office of collector, or shall refuse or neglect to produce to them the certificates of assessments, accounts, or vouchers of such receipts or payments as aforesaid, or shall not obey the order of such commissioners to be made as before directed, every such collector shall forfeit and pay the sum of 50*l.*, to be charged upon him in any assessment as aforesaid, and to be recovered as such assessment may be recovered, over and above any forfeiture or disability that may be incurred by virtue of this act for detaining monies of the said duties in his hands, contrary to this act; and whenever any money of the said duties herein mentioned, shall be detained in the hands of any collector or collectors, or any penalty or penalties imposed on any collector or collectors shall remain unpaid, and the same, or any part thereof, cannot be recovered by or under the warrant or authority of the respective commissioners, or the said respective commissioners shall neglect to issue such warrant, then such part thereof as cannot be so recovered, which shall have arisen from the said duties, shall be recoverable as a debt upon record to the king's majesty, his heirs and successors, with all costs and charges attending the same; and such part thereof which shall arise from any penalty as aforesaid, may be recovered by action or information, as other penalties may by this act be recovered, with full costs of Collectors refusing to attend commissioners with their assessments, &c., to forfeit 50*l.*

If monies in the hands of collectors cannot be recovered under the warrant of the commissioners, or the commissioners shall neglect to issue such warrant, the amount shall be recoverable as a debt upon record. (a)

(a) If a collector of assessed taxes does not pay over all sums collected by him, the parish is answerable to the crown for the deficiency. R. v. St. George's, Hanover Square, 3 Aust. 920.

A collector of taxes in custody under an extent, is not entitled to be discharged, although his deficiency has been made good to the crown by a reassessment upon the parish. R. v. Bennett, Wigham, 1.

Local commissioners for the affairs of taxes issued their warrant, under the 43 Geo. 3, c. 99, ss. 41 and 52, for seizing and securing the real and personal estate of a collector refusing to pay over money received by him, but as matter of arrangement did not proceed to sell the property so seized under such warrant, which had been issued expressly to secure a certain sum of money said to be due from him to the crown. Five days after, the solicitor for the taxes (the collector being declared a bankrupt on that day) issued extents, under which was taken not only the property already secured by the warrant of the commissioners of taxes within their jurisdiction, but also other real and personal property in other places, for the purpose of levying precisely the sum claimed on the same account; but it being eventually discovered, that the sum actually due to the crown for monies received by the collector, amounted to very considerably more than the sum for which the warrant (and consequently the extent) had issued, but suit; and the sum so recovered shall be paid to the receiver-general, in aid of the parish or place answerable for the same."

Sect. 42. "That the collector or collectors appointed for any parish, ward, or place as aforesaid, when required so to do by the churchwardens and overseers, or guardians of the poor, or any two of them, or the select vestry as aforesaid, or any seven of them, shall deliver to them respectively an account in writing of the sums received by such collector or collectors, and of the sums not to double the amount, the crown sold all the property, and applied the proceeds in discharge of the public debt, in aid of the parish, as far as it extended to satisfy it, which produced a net sum much larger than the sum sought to be raised originally, but not sufficient to pay the whole debt; which sum, so produced, was paid into the receipt of the Exchequer in August, 1817. Under such circumstances, this court refused to make absolute a rule (founded on the objection, that it was having recourse to two modes of proceeding for the same debt) granted to show cause (obtained on a motion made in July, 1819) why it should not be referred to the deputy remembrancer, to take an account of the money due to the crown, with a view to get the surplus, beyond the amount of the sum originally sought to be levied, paid back to the assignees of the bankrupt, holding that, for such a debt so incurred in such a character, the crown was entitled to use every mode of proceeding given by statute. The delay in the application, although not conclusive against assignees, strongly prejudiced their claim. R. v. Jones, 8 Price, 108.

The protection of parishes from re-assessment is an object of the care of the Court of Exchequer; and the necessity of process of extent in the second degree for that purpose, where a collector is become defaulter, is a strong ground for granting a stat; and the existing liability of the parish is consequently no answer to the objection of the crown debt not being in danger. R. v. W. Bell, 11 Price, 772.

Distinction between extent in aid and extent in chief in the second degree:—

The statute of the 57th of Geo. III. does not apply to extents in chief in the second degree. Therefore, the crown may proceed by extent to recover a small debt due from a person indebted to the crown debtor (a collector of taxes), who had received and misapplied the crown's money, although he be not a debtor to the crown within the fourth section of that statute. Neither does the recent rule of court, respecting extents in aid, apply to extents in chief in the second degree. It is not necessary, in the affidavit made for obtaining a baron's stat for such an extent, in such a case, that there should be any aver-ment of the insolvency of the crown debtor, or any fact stated from which it may be inferred. Id. ibid.

Nor is it necessary, in such a case, that collusion should be negatived. Id. ibid.

The sheriff is entitled to levy costs, under 43 Geo. III. c. 99, on an extent against a collector of taxes; and the sheriff's poundage is included in the word charges, and may be levied; and it is payable where the money is paid in before a conditionis expensas has issued, although that proceeding is obviated thereby.

But if the agent in the country, of the solicitors for taxes, have received any money from the defendant as costs under the levy, or the sheriffs have taken anything for extra costs, as bailiffs' fees and keeping possession, the court will order them to refund.

It does not seem to be necessary, under that act, that the commissioners should issue their warrant against the collector to recover the duties detained, to authorize the issuing of an extent against him as a condition precedent; or, if it be, it is rather a ground of a motion to set aside the extent for irregularity.

The bill of the solicitors prosecuting the extent for the crown may be taxed. R. v. Collingridge, 3 Price, 280.

It was doubted whether a re-assessment could go for the duties on carriages, servants, and horses. R. v. Wimbledon, 3 Anst. 855.

If the acting commissioners of taxes refuse (unless indemnified) to proceed to make a re-assessment on a parish, to which the deficiency applies, in execution of the powers entrusted to them by the several acts of Parliament, where an insuper has been set on the parish, whose collector is a defaulter, the Court of Exchequer will order them to do so, by rule to show cause, in the nature of a mandamus; and will also order a service on their clerk to be deemed good service: the crown is not limited to any time within which to make such an application. In re Wootton, 6 Price, 105.

In R. v. Deane, 2 Anst. 369, it was held, that where a collector of revenues gave a bond to the crown, the penalty is a security against all the expenses of process and execution against him.

in arrear, and of the sums remaining in his or their hands, and also of the sums paid to the receiver-general; and if any collector shall refuse or neglect so to do, within fourteen days after such demand shall be made, he shall forfeit and pay to the use of the poor of such parish or place, where such collector shall reside, the sum of 20*l*."

Sect. 43. "That if any collector to be appointed as aforesaid, shall neglect or refuse to demand payment of all sums of money given in charge to such collector of the respective persons chargeable therewith, or leave a demand in writing at their respective places of last abode, or on the premises, charged with the assessment, as the case may require, within the time herein limited; or in case of default of payment thereof upon such demand, shall neglect or refuse to execute the warrant or precept of the commissioners for recovering the same, within two calendar months after the said duties are payable, as by this act is directed, it shall not be lawful for such collector to insert in the schedule to be by the receiver-general returned into the Exchequer, the name of such person as having made default of payment of any of the sums rated or assessed on such person, but the parish, ward, or place respectively, for which such collector shall have been appointed, shall be answerable for the same, in the manner directed by any act or acts for granting the said duties herein mentioned."

Sect. 44. "That no collector appointed for any parish, ward, or place, shall be allowed to insert in any schedule the name of any person to be returned into the Exchequer as not having paid the duties made payable by any act or acts herein mentioned, unless such collector shall make oath, or, being one of the people called Quakers, shall make and subscribe a solemn affirmation before two commissioners (who respectively shall certify the said oath or affirmation on the said schedule), that the sum for which such person is so returned in default, is due and wholly unpaid, either to such collector, or to any other person or persons for such collector, to the best of his knowledge and belief, and that such person became insolvent or bankrupt before the day on which the duties became payable, and had not goods and chattels sufficient whereon to raise and levy such duties within the parish, ward, or place, for which such collector shall have been appointed at any time since such duties became payable, or that such person removed from the parish, ward, or place, for which such collector shall have been appointed before the day on which such duties became payable, without leaving therein sufficient goods and chattels whereon such duties then payable could be raised and levied, and that there were not, nor are, any goods and chattels of any person or persons liable to the payment of such duties in arrear, or any part thereof, whereby the same, or any part thereof, could or might be raised or levied, which oath or affirmation shall be indorsed on such schedule."

Sect. 45. "That the collectors appointed as aforesaid shall make a due return fairly written on paper, under their hands, to such commissioners, containing the names, surnames, and places of abode of every person within their respective collections, from whom such collector or collectors shall not have been able to collect or receive such duties for any of the causes before mentioned, and which shall have been duly verified on the oath of such collector as aforesaid, and the particular reason for returning each defaulter, and the sum and sums charged upon every such person; and such commissioners, after due examination thereof on the oaths or affirmations as aforesaid of the collectors, shall ascertain the sums which, according to the provisions of any of the said acts herein mentioned, shall have been discharged from assessment for any cause therein specially allowed; and the said commissioners shall also make out their schedules containing the sums so discharged, and the sums with which each and every such defaulter ought to be charged, and the sums which shall not have been collected by occasion of the collector's neglect, and which ought to be re-assessed on the parish, ward, or place as aforesaid, and shall cause the said several particulars to be inserted in a schedule fairly written on parchment, under the hands and seals of such commissioners, or any two or more of them, containing the names and surnames of the said collectors, and the same to be delivered to the receiver-general, to be returned by such receiver-general

48 Geo. 3, a. 99.

If collectors do not demand duties of the parties charged, and execute the warrants of the commissioners, within a limited time, the names of such persons cannot be returned into the Exchequer, but the parish must be answerable for the same.

Collectors not to insert in any schedule to be returned into the Exchequer, any person as a defaulter, unless upon oath as to certain particulars.

Collectors to make a return upon oath of persons from whom the duties cannot be collected.

into his majesty's said Court of Exchequer, whereupon every person so making default of payment, (a) and each parish, ward, or place, so in default, may be charged by process of court according to the course thereof in that behalf; and, in default of such schedule made out according to the directions of this act, it shall be lawful for the receiver-general, and he is hereby required, to return every such parish, ward, or place insuper, for all sums not paid to the receiver-general, and contained in the duplicate of assessment to him delivered, and all such sums so returned shall in such case be re-assessed on such parish, ward, or place; and all and every the proper officers therein concerned shall, and they are hereby required, to take care, from time to time, that such process be duly issued and made effectual, so that all such sums as shall be in arrear and unpaid as aforesaid, may be speedily recovered and paid into his majesty's Exchequer; and if any such collector shall neglect or refuse to make such return in manner before directed, every such collector shall forfeit the sum of 100*l*."

Sect. 47. "That in case there shall be any failure of assessing or charging the said duties in any parish, ward, or place, or of returning the duplicates of the assessments made for any such parish, ward, or place, or of raising or paying the several sums charged upon any person or persons in any such parish, ward, or place, within the respective times limited by this act, the receiver-general acting for the duties charged or to be charged on such parish, ward, or place, shall and may, at any time after such failure hath happened, certify to the barons of the Court of Exchequer at Westminster, the particular parish and parishes, ward or wards, or place and places, and the particular division where any such failure hath happened, and the cause thereof, to the best of his knowledge, together with the names of the commissioners appointed, as aforesaid, to act for the hundred, rape, lath, wapentake, city, ward, town, or place, or the division wherein such failure hath happened, or any two or more of them residing within such division, hundred, rape, lath, wapentake, city, ward, town, or place, and also the names of the assessors and collectors, and the several persons belonging to such parish or place charged to such duties, and who shall have made failure in the payment thereof, in case an assessment shall have been made, which said commissioners, assessors, and collectors, and any person or persons charged with such duties, shall be respectively liable to process for such neglect by the order of such barons, according to the exigency

"Fifth.—In every parish, ward, or place, where assessors shall not be appointed in pursuance of this act, or being appointed shall not have taken upon themselves the office on or before the commencement of the ensuing year, or where the assessors or collectors for any former year on whom the duty of assessor shall have devolved, shall not have taken upon themselves the office of assessor on or before the commencement of such ensuing year, it shall be lawful for the surveyor of the district, and he is hereby required, to execute the duty of assessor for such parish, ward, or place, until assessors shall be appointed who shall duly take upon themselves the said office."

"Sixth.—In every notice of continuance in office of any assessor or collector, the respective commissioners who shall cause such notice to be given, shall require the attendance of such assessor or collector on a day and at a place within the division to be named in such appointment or notice, then and there to receive and take charge of all such notices and papers as shall be delivered to them respectively, for the due execution of the said acts, in manner herein-after mentioned, which day shall not be later than seven days after the 5th day of April in each year; and in default of such notice being given by such commissioners, it shall be lawful for the inspector or surveyor of the district to give such notice, and to require the attendance of such assessors or collectors on a day and at a place within the division to be named by the said inspector or surveyor for that purpose."

"Second.—All such notices shall be delivered to such assessors or collectors as aforesaid, on or as soon after the 6th day of April in each year as the same can be done; and the delivery of such notices by such inspectors or surveyors, or any of them, shall be as effectual as if the same had been delivered by the commissioners of the division according to the directions of the said acts."

"Third.—The said assessors and collectors respectively are hereby required to observe such directions as may from time to time be given to them by the said inspectors and surveyors, in all matters touching the time and manner of fixing or delivering or otherwise serving such notices, and the persons on whom the same are to be served, such directions having been previously seen and allowed by the commissioners acting for the division in which the said inspector or surveyor shall act."

"Thirteenth.—If any surveyor or inspector shall wilfully make any false and vexatious charge of any of the said duties, or shall wilfully deliver, or cause to be delivered, to the respective commissioners for executing the said acts or any of them, any false and vexatious certificate of charge of any of the said duties, or any false and vexatious certificate of objection to any supplementary return, or shall be guilty of any fraudulent, illegal, or unjust conduct, in the prosecution of any charge of any of the said duties, or shall wilfully neglect the duty of his office, or in any manner offend against the laws for regulating the duty of his said office, and the same shall be proved on the certificate of the said respective commissioners of the division where such offence shall be committed, or any two or more of them, or on the affidavit on oath or solemn affirmation, to be taken before any one of the said respective commissioners, of any credible person or persons, to the satisfaction of the commissioners for the affairs of taxes, or any two or more of them, or by the confession of the said surveyor or inspector, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners for the affairs of taxes, for any such offence, to suspend the payment to the said surveyor or inspector of all or any reward, emolument, or advantage, which the said surveyor or inspector would be entitled to under the said acts or any of them, for any increase of duty or overplus above the rate of duty occasioned by the information or charge of the said surveyor or inspector, or such part thereof as the said commissioners for the affairs of taxes shall deem just and necessary, and finally to withhold the same, and direct the same to be paid by the receiver-general into his majesty's receipt of Exchequer; unless the lords commissioners of his majesty's Treasury shall think fit to restore the same to the said surveyor or inspector, or to mitigate and lessen the sum so to be withheld and paid over into his majesty's Exchequer: provided always, that nothing hereinbefore contained shall be construed to impeach or affect any action or suit for the recovery of any penalty or penalties imposed by any former act or acts, against such surveyor or inspector for any such offence or offences as aforesaid, or for any false and vexatious charge of any of the said duties; but all such penalties, and the powers for recovery thereof, shall be and remain in force, notwithstanding the powers of this act, or any act or thing done in pursuance thereof."

Assessments made in double duty, &c.

"Sixteenth.—Where an amended return, with a declaration annexed thereto, shall not be delivered to the surveyor or inspector, and where no list, statement, account, or estimate with such declaration annexed as aforesaid shall be produced to the said commissioners, on the hearing of such appeal, it shall not be lawful for the said respective commissioners to make any abatement, defalcation, or remission of the said double duty or any part thereof, but the same shall stand good and remain part of the annual assessment; unless the party charged shall have given notice of his or her consent to the charge of the said surveyor or inspector, or unless the said respective commissioners shall be of opinion that the said surveyor or inspector was or were enabled to correct or amend the first assessments of the said duties for that year, according to the directions of this act, by means of or by reference to the original return of the party so charged, in which cases it shall be lawful for the said commissioners who shall have confirmed such charge at the same time to remit and strike off the whole of the said double duty."

"Seventeenth.—Upon every charge confirmed upon appeal, if the said commissioners shall, after examination of the appellant, or by other lawful evidence produced on his or her behalf, as directed by the said acts respectively, be of opinion that the alleged default, neglect, omission, or claim of exemption, allowance, or deduction, hath been duly accounted for, and that the cause or causes have been truly stated in any amended return and annexed declaration, and that the appellant had a just or reasonable cause of controverting the said charge, and that the said default, neglect, omission, or claim of exemption, allowance, or deduction, was not wilfully made and with intention to defraud the revenue, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners who shall have determined the said appeal, although they

"Eighteenth.—Upon every charge confirmed upon appeal, although no amended return shall have been delivered to the surveyor or inspector as allowed by this act, if the said commissioners shall, after examination of the appellant, or by other lawful evidence produced on his or her behalf, as directed by the said acts respectively, be of opinion that the alleged default, neglect, omission, or claim of exemption, allowance, or deduction, was not wilfully made, and with intention to defraud the revenue, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners who shall have determined the said appeal, at the same time to remit and strike off any part of the said double duty, not exceeding one moiety thereof; provided that, in every such case, if the appellant shall prove to the satisfaction of the said commissioners, that he or she hath been prevented from making such amended return within the time herein limited by absence or sickness or other sufficient cause, and that such default, neglect, omission, or claim as aforesaid, was not wilfully made, and with intention to defraud the revenue, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to remit and strike off the whole of the said double duty."

"Nineteenth.—Nothing herein contained shall be construed to grant the double duty, or any part thereof, on any of the said duties, if the party charged shall not, by the laws in force at and immediately before the passing of this act, be directed to return the article, matter, or thing on which the said duties shall be chargeable, and for which the said party was so charged."

"Twentieth.—Every increase of duty made by occasion of such charges, whether the whole of the double duty shall be remitted or not, and also the double duty, or such part thereof which shall not be remitted, shall be certified on the supplementary assessments to be made for each year under the hands of the said respective commissioners or any two of them, to the commissioners for the affairs of taxes; and the said commissioners for the affairs of taxes shall have authority to direct the receiver-general who shall have received the said increase and double duty, to pay to the said surveyor and inspector out of the same, in such proportions as they shall think proper, or to either of them, as they see fit, any sum of money not exceeding the rate which shall have been settled by the lords commissioners of the treasury, or the high treasurer for the time being, as a reward for their labour and diligence in making such increase of duty; and the certificate of the said commissioners for the affairs of taxes, or any three or more of them, shall be a warrant to the said receiver-general to pay the same."

"Twenty-first.—The determination of the commissioners acting for the general purposes of the acts relating to the duties arising from the profits of property, professions, trades, or offices, upon any objection made by the surveyor or inspector of the said duties to the estimate or value of any property, or to the estimate of the profits of any profession, trade, or office on which any assessment after appeal shall be made, shall be construed to preclude any surveyor or inspector from afterwards making a further charge on the same person or persons for the same property or profits for the same year of assessment; and, in like manner, the determination of the said commissioners upon every such objection to the estimates or value delivered by the assessors of the property in any parish, ward, or place in which assessments after appeal shall be made, shall preclude the surveyor or inspector from afterwards making a further charge on the same property in the same parish, ward, or place in that year."

"Twenty-second.—The objection of any surveyor or inspector to the estimate or estimates of any person or persons, or of the assessor or assessors of any parish, ward, or place, or to any assessment or assessments of additional commissioners in pursuance of the said last-mentioned acts, in relation to the duties arising from the profits of property, professions, trades, and offices, shall not be construed to preclude any surveyor or inspector from afterwards charging the same person or persons for any other property, or the profits of any other profession, trade, or office not included in the estimate or estimates, assessment or assessments before objected to, and determined as aforesaid; nor to preclude any surveyor or inspector from afterwards objecting to any other estimate or estimates, or assessment or assessments, or from afterwards charging any other person or persons in the same parish, ward, or place, or in any other parish, ward, or place in the same or any other division, in respect of any property or the profits of any profession, trade, or office, not before objected to and determined as aforesaid; and the respective commissioners acting for the general purposes of the said last-mentioned acts are hereby strictly enjoined and required to sign and allow such last-mentioned objections and charges according to the directions of the said acts, in respect of the powers therein given to such surveyor and inspector; provided, that all such objections and charges be made within the times herein respectively limited."

"Twenty-third.—From and after the passing of this act, every objection to the estimates directed by the said last-mentioned acts, in relation to the duties arising from the profits of property, professions, trades, or offices, shall be made before the first assessments on such estimates shall have been signed and allowed by the commissioners for the general purposes of the said acts, and not afterwards."

Objection to be made before assessment.

"Twenty-fourth.—No charge upon any assessment under the said last-mentioned acts, in relation to the duties arising from the profits of property, professions, trades, or offices, shall be allowed or signed, unless the certificate thereof shall be delivered to the respective commissioners before the expiration of three calendar months after the 5th day of January in the year of such assessment, in case such assessment shall have been made on or before the said 5th day of January, or, if such assessment shall not then have been made, unless the certificate of charge thereon shall be delivered to the said commissioners within three calendar months after such assessment shall have been made, except in the cases herein-after mentioned."

Charges to be made in a limited time.

"Twenty-fifth.—If any person or persons shall have neglected to make a return of property or profits as required by the said last-mentioned acts, and no estimate of the said property or profits, nor any assessment, shall be made thereupon for any year, it shall be lawful for the surveyor or inspector, on discovery thereof, at any time within twelve calendar months after the expiration of the year when such return ought to have been made, to charge such person or persons to the amount which ought to have been returned, in like manner as such persons might have been charged within the year of assessment; and the like proceedings shall be thereupon had as if such discovery and charge had been made within the year of assessment; and every assessment thereupon made shall be added to the current assessments of the parish, ward, or place, in the manner herein directed."

When charges of property omitted may be made.

"Twenty-sixth.—If any person or persons shall by any falsehood, wilful neglect, fraud, covin, or contrivance whatever, escape from taxation for the profits of any distinct property, profession, trade, or office for any year, it shall be lawful for the surveyor or inspector, within the like period of twelve calendar months as aforesaid, to charge such person or persons to double the amount of duty which ought to have been charged in the year of assessment upon such distinct property, profession, trade, or office; and upon proof of such falsehood, wilful neglect, fraud, covin, or contrivance, to the satisfaction of the commissioners to whom such charge shall be certified, the assessment on the said double duty shall stand good, and be added to the supplementary assessments of the current year of the parish, ward, or place; and no part thereof shall be remitted on any pretence whatever."

In case of fraud, charge to be made.

Sec. 2. "That the several provisions in the preceding clause of this act, relating to charges in the single duty as aforesaid, shall be construed, so far as the same respect the duties of assessed taxes in that part of Great Britain as aforesaid, as applicable to the provisions of an act passed in the forty-third year of the reign of his present majesty, intituled, 'An Act for Repealing the several Duties under the Management of the Commissioners for the Affairs of Taxes, and granting New Duties in lieu thereof; for granting New Duties in certain Cases therein mentioned; for repealing the Duties of Excise on Licenses, and on Carriages constructed by Coachmakers, and granting New Duties thereon, under the Management of the said Commissioners for the Affairs of Taxes; and also New Duties on Persons selling Carriages by Auction or Commission;' and any other act or acts for regulating the said duties respectively, and relating to surcharges in the double duty, and as far as the said provisions respect the duties arising from the profits of property, professions, trades, and offices in that part of Great Britain as aforesaid, the same shall be construed as applicable to the provisions of an act passed in the forty-sixth year of the reign of his present majesty, intituled, 'An Act for granting to his Majesty during the present War, and until the Sixth Day of April next after the Ratification of a Definitive Treaty of Peace, further additional Rates and Duties in Great Britain on the Rates and Duties on Profits arising from Property, Professions, Trades, and Offices; and for Repealing an Act passed the directions of the several acts granting the said duties, or other acts relating to the said respective duties, than by process to be issued out of the Court of Exchequer, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners for the affairs of taxes to direct the said receiver-general to return the said schedules to the said respective commissioners from whom he or they received the same; and the said respective commissioners shall cause the said duties in arrear to be levied, under all or any of the powers, and by any of the ways and methods, prescribed in the said acts respectively, without delay."

III. Of the Assessed Taxes themselves. (a)

The assessed taxes themselves are annual duties, charged as follows:—Until the passing the act 43 Geo. III. c. 161, most of these duties were imposed by various acts of Parliament; but that act, reciting that the several acts might be more effectually carried into execution if the provisions for ascertaining, charging, and assessing the duties were comprised in one act, and varied and amended in some respects, enacted, that in lieu and instead of the duties granted by, or contained in the several schedules annexed to the prior recited acts, and thereafter repealed, there shall be assessed, raised, levied, collected, and paid certain duties specified in the schedule to that act; and then refers to those ten schedules of different descriptions of taxes, by letters A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, and K, viz:—A. of duties payable for every dwelling-house within and throughout Great Britain, according to the number of windows or lights in each. B. of duties made payable on all inhabited dwelling-houses, according to the value thereof. C. of duties payable annually for every male servant retained or employed in certain named capacities. D. of duties payable on carriages therein mentioned. E. of duties payable for horses, mares, and geldings used as therein mentioned. F. of duties payable for other horses, not charged with duty in last schedule and on mules. G. of duties payable on dogs. H. of duties payable by horse-dealers. I. of duties payable by persons wearing hair-powder. K. of duties payable for using armorial bearings.

The statutes 48 Geo. III. c. 55, and 52 Geo. III. c. 93, add schedule L., of duties payable for selling game.

The act 43 Geo. III. c. 161, and the schedules thereof, contained rules for charging the duties, together with certain modifications, reductions, and exemptions; and also provides that the duties granted by that act shall be levied pursuant to the regulations of the 43 Geo. III. c. 99 (ante, p. 700—724), and in Scotland under the regulations in 43 Geo. III. c. 150; and enacts that the commissioners, inspectors, surveyors, assessors, and collectors, acting under the said acts (43 Geo. III. c. 99, and c. 150), shall execute all matters and things in relation to the duties by that act granted.

By several subsequent acts, hereafter noticed, new provisions were introduced, and the amount of duties increased, diminished, or repealed, as the exigencies of the public have required. But still, as this principal act, 43 Geo. III. c. 161, is the main regulating act, it is deemed expedient first to state its provisions, then the subsequent regulations, and lastly the several schedules of duties. We will, therefore, consider the third branch of the subject under two heads, viz. First, the Regulations of the 43 Geo. III. c. 161, and subsequent acts; and, secondly, the several Duties, with the particular rules and exemptions affecting them.

The lower part of a smaller house, used as an office, adjoining the dwelling-house of the party, and having an internal communication with the latter, is not exempt from the assessed taxes on windows within the first section of the 57 Geo. III. c. 25, on the ground of its being used as offices, and for no other purpose.

Nor is a room, having no communication with the dwelling-house, if it be part of the house, within the exemption of the statute, as being used only for an office. R. v. Dryden, 8 Price, 103.

The windows of the upper story of a house, of which the lower part or ground floor is occupied by the owner as a dwelling, are chargeable with the duties on houses and windows, although let to a trader as a warehouse, and not used by him for any purpose of habitation, and although there be no communication between the upper story so let and the lower part of the house so occupied for habitation. In re Cowell, 8 Price, 105.

Houses built on lands embanked from the Thames, in pursuance of the 7 Geo. III. c. 37, which vests those lands in the owners, "free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever," are not liable to be rated for the relief of the poor. R. v. the City of London Gas Light and Coke Company, M. & R. Rep. vol. 2, 12; 8 B. & C. 54. But this act does not exempt the occupiers of such houses from the payment of the house and window duties imposed by 38 Geo. III. c. 40. Perchard v. Heywood, 8 T. R. 468; Williams v. Prichard, 4 T. R. 2.

(a) The commissioners executing the several acts relating to the duties of assessed taxes for districts, are not entitled, under the 43 Geo. III. c. 161, s. 15, empowering them to discharge assessments at their discretion, to discharge persons charged for houses under sect. 10, on the ground of not having been occupied during the whole year, unless notice in writing have been given to the assessor of such houses having been unoccupied. And, if the commissioners should insert any such allowance in their schedule of discharge (as in that case the opinion of the judges cannot be taken, because that can only be done on a case of appeal), the Court of Exchequer will order them to amend their schedule by striking it out. In re Colyton, 8 Price, 117.

Sect. 18. "That no window or light shall be exempted from the duties made payable by this act by reason of its having been stopped up, unless such window or light shall be stopped up effectually with stone or brick, or with the same kind of materials whereof that part of the outside walls of such dwelling-house, in which such window or light shall have been, doth chiefly consist."

Sect. 19. "That nothing herein contained shall be construed to charge any window or light in the roof of any dwelling-house which shall be stopped up on the outside thereof effectually with materials of the like nature of which the outside of the roof shall chiefly consist, nor any window or light which shall have been stopped up before the commencement of this act, according to the directions of the laws in force at the time of passing this act."

Sect. 20. "That from and after the passing of this act, no window or light shall be newly opened or made in any dwelling-house or office belonging thereto, nor shall any such window or light which shall have been stopped up at the time when the assessment in respect of such dwelling-house shall be made for the then current year, be restored, nor shall any window or light which has been charged in that year be stopped up, without, in each of the cases, six days' previous notice thereof in writing being given by the occupier or occupiers of such dwelling-house, to the surveyor or inspector of the said duties, or one of them, for the place in which the assessment was made, describing therein the particular situation of every such window or light in such dwelling-house, and the number of such windows or lights, if more than one, so to be made, restored, or stopped up, on pain that the occupier or occupiers of such dwelling-house, neglecting to give such notice, shall forfeit and pay the sum of 10*l.* for every window or light so newly made, restored, or stopped up as aforesaid, and which penalty shall be paid over and above any duty payable in respect of such dwelling-house."

Sect. 21. "That in case any surveyor or inspector herein mentioned shall receive any notice, or shall otherwise find or discover that any window or light in any such dwelling-house, liable to the said duties, hath been newly made or restored as aforesaid, which window or light hath not been charged in the assessment for that year, then such surveyor or inspector shall and is hereby required to certify the same in writing under his hand, by way of charge, to any two or more of the commissioners for putting this act in execution, and shall state in such certificate to what amount the person or persons liable to the said duties hath or have been underrated in the assessment for that year; and thereupon the said commissioners, or any two or more of them, shall cause such assessment to be amended according to such certificate, and the duties to be charged shall be levied thereon, from the commencement of the year in which such window or light shall have been restored, as if such window or light had been originally included in such assessment: provided always, that if the commissioners shall be of opinion that any window or light so restored in any dwelling-house shall have been stopped up at the time when the assessment was made, with intent to evade the payment of the said duties, they shall charge the occupier of the said dwelling-house at the rate of double the sum by which the assessment shall be increased by reason of such certificate: provided, also, that every such assessment, when amended, shall be liable to be appealed against in such manner as if the same had been originally so made."

Sect. 22. "That no assessment shall be subject to appeal, nor any abatement of the duties allowed in any year, by reason of any windows or lights being stopped up, unless it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the commissioners Warehouses detached.

" And also, except such warehouses as are distinct and separate buildings, and not parts or parcels of such dwelling-houses, or the shops attached thereto, but employed solely for the purpose of lodging goods, wares, and merchandise, or for carrying on some manufacture (notwithstanding the same may adjoin to or have communication with the dwelling-house or shop.)"

"Tenth.—In case the poor-rate in any parish or place shall not be made on the full annual value of the different dwelling-houses charged, nor according to any proportionate part of such annual value, but, nevertheless, the said dwelling-houses shall be rated in a due proportion to each other, it shall be lawful for the assessors, by all lawful ways and means authorized by this act, to inquire into, and, to the best of their information and judgment, to ascertain the actual rent of the several houses and other the premises aforesaid, in different occupations within their limits, which shall have been let within the period of three years preceding the time for making the assessment, or so many of them as they shall be able to ascertain the rent of, and shall make an assessment on the actual rent on such of the said houses and premises therewith occupied, which shall appear to them to have been so let at the just and full value thereof, and shall afterwards proceed to assess the several other houses with the premises aforesaid occupied therewith in sums respectively bearing the same proportion, as far as the same can be computed, to the amount of such first assessment as the sums charged on the said poor-rate on such other premises respectively bear to the sum charged in the said poor-rate on the said house and premises so first assessed: provided always, that the aforesaid rule shall extend only to such houses and premises chargeable under this act as shall be rated in such poor-rate, distinctly and unmixed with other property not chargeable to the duties hereby granted. I. Threats to Murder, or burn or destroy Property.

Threatening letters to murder or burn, or destroy property.

BY the 4 Geo. IV. c. 54, s. 3, which repeals the 9 Geo. I. c. 22, and 30 Geo. II. c. 24, so far as the same relate to this offence, it is enacted "that, from and after the passing of this act, if any person shall knowingly and wilfully send or deliver any letter or writing, with or without any name or signature subscribed thereto, or with a fictitious name or signature, [demanding money or other valuable thing,] or threatening to kill or murder any of his majesty's subjects, or to burn or destroy his or their houses, out-houses, barns, stacks of corn or grain, hay or straw, (a) [or shall knowingly and wilfully send or deliver any such letter or writing, threatening to accuse any of his majesty's subjects of any crime punishable by law with death, transportation, or pillory, or of an infamous crime, with a view or intent to extort or gain money, security for goods or chattels, wares or merchandize, from the person or persons so threatened,] or shall procure, counsel, aid, or abet the commission of the said offences, or any of them, or shall forcibly rescue any person being lawfully in custody of any officer or other person for any of the said offences, every person so offending, being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be adjudged guilty of felony, and shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for such term not less than seven years, as the court shall adjudge, or to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour in the common gaol or house of correction, for any term not exceeding seven years."

(a) The parts of this clause between brackets, relating to threats to extort money, &c., is repealed by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27, and re-enacted by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, post, p. 919.

THREATS TO MURDER, &c.

Shall knowingly and wilfully—Proof of a prisoner's delivering a threatening letter sealed up, to a person to carry to the post-office, will afford prima facie evidence of his knowledge of its contents. R. v. Girdwood, 2 East's P. C. 1120; 1 Leach, 142.

Knowingly and wilfully.

Evidence of prior and subsequent letters between the prisoner and the party threatened may be received, to explain the intention of that on which the indictment is framed. 2 Leach, 749.

Send or deliver—Dropping a letter in a man's way, that he may pick it up, is a sending it to him. R. v. Wagstaff, R. & R., C. C. R. 398.

What a sending.

In Lloyd's case, 2 East's P. C. 1122, the letter was dropped in a vestry-room, frequented by the prosecutor every Sunday morning, where it was picked up by the sexton, and given to the prosecutor; and Mr. Justice Yates had no doubt but this was a sending, within the act.

So, in Jepson and Springett's case, id. post. 918, the letter was thrown into the prosecutor's yard, from whence it was taken up by the prosecutor's servant, and delivered to him.

And it was a sending within the 27 Geo. II. c. 15, though the party saw the prisoner drop the letter, if the prisoner did not think the party knew him, and intended he should not. R. v. Wagstaff, R. & R., C. C. 398.

To have brought the offence within 27 Geo. II. c. 15, the letter must have been sent to the person threatened, and so stated in the indictment; but the twelve judges intimated, that if a letter threatening A. is sent to B., and the prisoner intended that he should deliver it to A., and he does so deliver it, this is a sending it by the prisoner to A., and may be charged as such. R. v. Padde, R. & R., C. C. R. 484; R. v. Dunkley, R. & M., C. C. 90.

Where the wife wrote a threatening letter, and the husband carried it to the party threatened, it was held that the husband, though privy to the writing, was not within the now repealed statutes, 9 Geo. I. and 27 Geo. II.; nor could the wife alone be convicted, unless she wrote and sent it without the husband, who delivered it, being privy to the contents. John Hammond and Mary Hammond were indicted on the 9 Geo. I. c. 22, and 27 Geo. II. c. 15, for maliciously sending a threatening letter to D. Dancer, demanding 10*l.* It appeared in evidence that the prisoners were husband and wife, and lived as servants with the prosecutor; that the wife wrote the letter, and that it was delivered to the prosecutor by the husband, who said he found it in the prosecutor's garden; but there was no evidence that he had any knowledge of its contents. It was objected on behalf of the prisoners, that the offence described by the statutes on which the indictment was founded, was "knowingly sending a threatening letter:" whereas the evidence only showed that the wife had written the letter, and that the husband had delivered it; and that there was no proof of its having been sent to the prosecutor. The court (Ashurst, J. and Penryn,) agreed, that merely writing a threatening letter would not constitute the offence, within these acts of Parliament; that carrying a letter could not be comprehended under the word "send" in the statutes; that the legislature had not in contemplation that any person would be the carrier of a threatening letter which he himself had written or contrived, and that the act of delivering a threatening letter was not the offence described in those statutes; that if any doubt could be entertained upon that point, the legislature itself had removed it; for, by the subsequent act, 30 Geo. II. c. 24, the offence of delivering as well as sending a threatening letter was made a misdemeanor, punishable at the discretion of the court, according to the circumstances of the case. But the court further observed, that there was still a question for the consideration of the jury; for, though Mary Hammond were the wife of the other prisoner, yet, if the jury were of opinion that she wrote the letter herself, without any intervention of her husband, and sent it by him, without his knowing anything of the contents, to the prosecutor, she alone might be found guilty; but that otherwise both the prisoners must be acquitted. The jury, on this direction, acquitted both the prisoners. R. v. John and Mary Hammond, 2 East's P. C. 1119; 2 Leach, 499, S. C.

Nature of the letter or writing.

Any Letter or Writing with or without any Name or Signature subscribed thereto, or with a fictitious Name or Signature—By the wording of the prior statutes, 9 Geo. I. and 27 Geo. II., it was no offence if the defendant did not conceal himself. Therefore, sending a threatening letter without any name subscribed to it, demanding money, was not an offence within the 27 Geo. II. c. 15, [nor is it, it should seem, under the new act.] if the contents of the letter clearly show who was the writer, and that he could have no intention to conceal himself. It is the same in effect as if the party had put his name to it. Hemmick's case, Warwick Sum. Ass. 1799, 2 East's P. C. 1116; 1 Leach, 445. n., S. C.

In the case of Michael Robinson, who was indicted on these two statutes for sending a letter without any name subscribed thereto, to the prosecutor, demanding a certain valuable thing, viz. a bank-note, it appeared that the letter was signed R. R. It was objected (among other things) that this was not within the statutes, because the letter had a name subscribed to it; but all the judges were of opinion that there was no weight in this objection. 2 East's P. C. 1110; 2 Leach, 749, S. C.; and see R. v. Wagstaff, R. & R., C. C. 393.

threat.

Threatening to burn Houses, &c.—A conviction on the now repealed act, 27 Geo. II. c. 15, for sending a letter to the prosecutor, threatening "to set fire to his mill, and likewise to do all the public injury they were able to him in his farm and seteres," was held wrong, he not then having any mill to which the threat of burning would apply (having parted with it three years before), and the threat as to the farm, &c. not necessarily implying a burning. Jos. Jepson and George Springett were indicted upon the act now repealed, 27 Geo. II. c. 15, for sending to the prosecutor, Mr. Woodgate, a letter according to the following effect:—

"March 3d, 1798.

"Mr. Woodgate.—Sir, I am very sorry to acquaint you that we are determined to set your mill on fire, and likewise to do all the public injury that we are able to do you in all your farms and seteres which you are in possession of without you on next day release that Ann Wood, which you put in confinement. Sir, we mention in a few lines, and we hope, if you have any regard to your wife and family, you will take our meaning without anything further; and you do not, we will persist as far as we possibly can, so you may lay your hands on your heart, and strive your uttermost ruin. I shall not mention nothing more to you until such time as you find the few lines a fact. With our respect. So on more at this time from me, R. R."

It was proved that the letter was in the hand-writing of Jepson, and that it was thrown by the other prisoner into Mr. Woodgate's yard, from whence it was taken by a servant of Mr. Woodgate and delivered to him. Mr. Woodgate swore that he had a share in a mill three years before this letter was written, but had no mill at that time; that he held a farm when the letter was written and came to his hands, and still holds it, with several buildings upon it. It was objected that this was not such a letter as comprehended the offence of the act of Parliament, 27 Geo. II. c. 15. At a conference of the judges at the conviction, in Michaelmas term, 1798 (absent Eyre, C. J.), it was agreed that the prosecutor having no such property at the time as the mill which was threatened to be burnt, that part of the letter must be laid out of the question; but, as to the rest of it, Lord Kenyon, C. J., and Buller, J. were of opinion that the letter must be understood as also importing a threat to burn the prosecutor's farm-house and buildings; but the other judges not thinking it necessary construction, the conviction was holden wrong, and a pardon recommended.

But, in the case of R. v. Girdwood, a letter accusing the prosecutor having taken away the life of a friend of the writer's, who was come to revenge him, was ruled to be evidence to go to the jury, upon a charge of sending a letter threatening to kill and murder the prosecutor.

Whether the letter amount to a threat to kill or murder, is a fact to be determined by the jury. R. v. Girdwood, 2 East's P. C. 1121; and see R. v. Tucker, post, 920.

Indictment].—The indictment must set forth the threatening letter, in order that the court may judge whether it falls within the purview of the respective statutes. Lloyd's case, 1787, 2 East's P. C. 1123; see, further, Indictment, Vol. III. p. 347.

The party may be tried in the county where the letter was delivered to the prosecutor, though written by the prisoner, and by him sent, in another county. Girdwood's case, 2 East's P. C. 1120.

And the offence of sending a threatening letter may be laid in the county where it is delivered by the post. An indictment on the 30 Geo. II. against two defendants for sending a letter to the prosecutor, threatening to accuse him of an unnatural crime, with intent to extort money from him, laid the offence in Middlesex, but the letter was dated from Maidstone in Kent. The sending was proved by the defendant's confession. It was objected, that as the letter was dated and sent by the post from Maidstone, the fact of the sending, which constituted the offence, was committed in Kent, and the indictment would not lie in Middlesex. But Lord Mansfield, C. J., held that, as it was directed to the prosecutor in Middlesex, where it was delivered, that was a sending in Middlesex; for the whole was to be considered as the act of the defendant, to the time of the delivery in that county. R. v. Esser, 2 East's P. C. 1125; R. v. Burdett, ante, Libel, Vol. III. p. 628; Indictment, Vol. III. p. 330; 1 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 12.

And it seems the prisoner may be tried in the county in which the prisoner sends the letter, though the prosecutor may receive it in another county. The offence described in the 9 Geo. I. c. 22, and 27 Geo. II. c. 15, is that of sending the threatening letter; it should seem, therefore, that the offence is complete, as far as depends on the prisoner, by his putting the letter into the post-office, to go into another county. By this act of putting the letter into the post-office, in the county of A., he sends it (in the language of the statutes) to the prosecutor, though the latter may afterwards receive it in the county of B.

II. Threats to Extort Money, &c.

It seems that an indictment will lie at common law for extorting money by actual duress, or by such threats as common firmness is not capable of resisting. Therefore, where money is extorted from a party by the threat of accusing him of an unnatural crime, and, from the circumstances of the case, the offence does not amount to robbery (as to which see ante, p. 316 to 321) it is indictable as a misdemeanor at common law. 2 Russ. 576; R. v. Sonturton, 6 East, 126, 140; 11 Mod. 137; 3 Chit. C. L. 840; and see forms of indictments, 3 Chit. C. L. 841, 842.

The 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 6, enacts, "that if any person shall rob any other person of any chattel, money, or valuable security, every such offender, being convicted thereof, shall suffer death as a felon; and if any person shall steal any such property from the person of another, or shall assault any other person with intent to rob him, or shall, with menaces or by force, demand any such property of any other person with intent to steal the same, every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding our years, and, if a male, to be once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped (if the court shall so think fit), in addition to such imprisonment."

Sec. 7 enacts, "that if any person shall accuse, or threaten to accuse, any other person of an infamous crime, as hereinafter defined, with a view or intent to extort or gain from him, and shall by intimidating him by such accusation or threat extort or gain from him, any chattel, money, or valuable security, every such offender shall be deemed guilty of robbery, and shall be indicted and punished accordingly."

By sect. 8 it is enacted, "that if any person shall knowingly send or deliver any letter or writing, demanding of any person, with menaces, and without any reasonable or probable cause, any chattel, money, or valuable security; or if any person shall accuse or threaten to accuse, or shall knowingly send or deliver any letter or writing, accusing or threatening to accuse any person of any crime punishable by law with death, transportation, or pillory, or of any assault with intent to commit any rape, or of any attempt or endeavour to commit any rape, or of any infamous crime, as hereinafter defined [sect. 9], with a view or intent to extort or gain from such person any chattel, money, or valuable security; every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years, and, if a male, to be once, twice, or thrice publicly or privately whipped (if the court shall so think fit), in addition to such imprisonment."

Sect. 9 enacts, "that the abominable crime of buggery, committed either with mankind or with beast, and every assault with intent to commit the said abominable crime, and every attempt or endeavour to commit the said abominable crime, and every solicitation, persuasion, promise, or threat, offered or made to any person, whereby to move or induce such person to commit or permit the said abominable crime, shall be deemed to be an infamous crime within the meaning of this act."

See the general clauses affecting all the provisions of this act, ante, Lawr. Vol. III. p. 550 to 556.

The offence of robbery, and the threats and fear essential to constitute it, have been already considered, ante, Robbery.

As to what will amount to a guilty knowledge of sending, and the sending of a letter, within the meaning of the eighth section of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, see ante, p. 917.

Where the letter contained a request only, but intimated that, if it were complied with, the writer would publish a certain libel then in his possession, accusing the prosecutor of murder, this was holden to amount to a demand. R. v. Robinson, 2 Leach, 749; 2 East's P. C. 1110. But it is not necessary, under this branch of the statute, that the letter should contain a threat to appear to demand money, &c., in the strict sense of the word, it is sufficient if it bring it within the act. A mere request, however, such as asking charity, or the like, without imposing any conditions, would not come within the meaning of the word "demand" in the statute. Per Buller, J., S. C.

Where an anonymous letter stated that the writer had overheard certain persons agree together to do an injury to the person and property of the prosecutor, to whom the letter was sent, and that, if thirty sovereigns were paid at a particular place, the writer would give such information as would frustrate the attempt, it was held, that this was not a threatening letter within the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 8; although it appeared that the letter was a mere device to defraud the prosecutor of thirty sovereigns. R. v. Pickford, 4 C. & P. 227.

Whether the letter amount to a threat to accuse the prosecutor of the offence mentioned, is a fact to be determined by the jury. See R. v. Girdlestone, 2 East's P. C. 1121.

If the terms of the letter are doubtful as to the exact accusations the prisoner meant to threaten, his declarations subsequently made, on being asked what he meant to impute, are evidence to explain the meaning of the letter. R. v. Tucker, cor. Twelve Just., 1826 (MS.); Car. C. L.; R. & M., C. C. 11 S. C.

Indictment.

In Edward Major's case, the indictment charged that the prisoner, intended to extort and gain money from one Augustine Rayner, unlawfully, knowingly, and designedly, sent to the said A. R. a certain letter in writing, &c., threatening, &c.; and then set forth the letter, as follows: "Sir, I receive etter respecting the bill which I gave you when we parted; and, as you know, I have it not in my power to pay it, and, if I had, it is an unjust demand. I have only to observe, that if you do not immediately return it to me as an acknowledgment for the obscene offence of sodomy attempted upon me, &c., I am determined to prosecute you to the utmost rigour of the law, &c. (Signed) E. Major (and dated), June 1st, 1796: "with a view and intent to extort and gain money from the said A. R., against the form of the statute, &c. The judges, on reference to them after conviction, in Michaelmas term, 1796, held the conviction wrong; for the letter was not sent to extort money, but to procure delivery up of the bill. R. v. Major, 2 East's P. C. 1118.

An indictment on the eighth section of the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, must set forth the letter or writing sent.

But it need not specify the infamous crime of which the prosecutor was threatened to be accused; for the specific crime the prisoner threatened to charge might intentionally be left in doubt. R. v. Tucker, R. & M., C. C. 34.

An indictment charging that the prisoner did feloniously and maliciously, with intent to extort, &c., "menace and threaten to prosecute J. N.," was not good, under the 4 Geo. IV. c. 54 (ante, p. 916); but, if the indictment had allowed the terms of the statute, and the evidence been of a threat to prosecute, the judge would leave it to the jury to say whether that was not a threatening to accuse. R. v. Abgood, 2 C. & P. 436.

An indictment on the statute for demanding money must show by whom it was demanded; and an indictment on the statute for threatening to accuse must show who was threatened. R. v. Dunkley, R. & M., C. C. R. 90.

It seems questionable whether a count framed on a letter demanding money will be supported by evidence that the letter was written with a view to extort money. R. & M., C. C. 38; 2 East's P. C. 1110; Leuch, C. C. 749, 4th d., S. C.

Time. (a)

- Statement of. AS to the statement, &c. of, in an indictment, see Indictment, Vol. III. p. 344; in a conviction, see Conviction, Vol. I. p. 816, 819; as to proof, see Evidence, Vol. II. p. 23.
- Time of memory. Time of memory hath been long ago ascertained by the law to commence from the beginning of the reign of Rich. I., viz. sixth of July, A. D. 1189, and any custom may be destroyed by evidence of non-existence in any part of the long period from that time to the present. 2 Inst. 238, 239; 2 Bla. Com. 32.
This rule was adopted when, by stat. West. 1 (3 Edw. I. c. 39), the reign of Rich. I. was made the time of limitation in a writ of right; but by the 32 Hen. VIII. c. 2, this period in a writ of right has been since reduced to sixty years Ibid.
- A year. The year consists of three hundred and sixty-five days; there are six hours within a few minutes over in each year, which, every fourth year, makes another day, viz. three hundred and sixty-six, and being the 29th of February, constitute the Bissextile or leap-year. Co. Lit. 135; 2 Roll. 521, l. 35; Com. Dig. Ann. (A.); 24 Geo. II. c. 23, s. 2; 2 Bla. Com. 140, notes by Chitty.
Where a statute speaks of a year, it shall be computed by the whole twelve months, according to the calendar, and not by a lunar month. Cro. Jac. 166.
But if a statute direct a prosecution to be within twelve months, it is too late to proceed after the expiration of twelve lunar months. Carth. 407.
A twelvemonth in the singular number includes all the year, but twelve months shall be computed according to twenty-eight days for every month. 6 Rep. 62.
The 43 Geo. III. c. 84, which prohibits, under a penalty, a spiritual person from absenting himself from his benefice for more than a certain time in any year, means year from the time when the action is brought for the penalty. 2 M. & S. 534.
- Half a year. Half a year consists of one hundred and eighty-two days, for there shall be no regard to a part or a fraction of a day. Co. Lit. 135, b.; Cro. Jac. 166.
The time to collate within six months shall be reckoned half a year, or one hundred and eighty-two days, and not lunar months. Cro. Jac. 166; 6 Rep. 61.
2 Bla. Com. 140, notes by Chitty.
- Quarter of a year. A quarter of a year consists but of ninety-one days, for the law does not regard the six hours afterwards. Co. Lit. 135, b.; 2 Roll. 521, l. 40; Com. Dig. Ann. (A.)
But both half-years and quarters are usually divided according to certain feasts or holydays, rather than a precise division of days, as Lady Day, Midsummer Day, Michaelmas Day, or Christmas, or old Lady Day (sixth of April) or old Michaelmas Day (the eleventh of October). In these cases such division of the year by the parties is regarded by the law, and, therefore, though half a year's notice to quit is necessary to determine a tenancy from year to year, yet a notice served on the twenty-ninth of September, to quit on the twenty-fifth of March, being half a year's notice according to the above division, is good, though it be less than one hundred and eighty-two, viz. one hundred and seventy-two days. 4 Exp. R. 5, 198; 6 Exp. 53; Schw. N. P. Ejectment; Adams, 22; 2 Bla. Com. 149, notes by Chitty.
- Month. A month is solar, or computed, according to the calendar, which consists of thirty or thirty-one days; or lunar, which consists of twenty-eight days. Co. Lit. 135, b.
In temporal matters, it is usually construed to mean lunar: in ecclesiastical, solar or calendar. 1 Bla. R. 450; 1 M. & S. 111; 1 Bing. Rep. 307.

(a) Ser., as to time in general, 2 Bla. Com. 140, by Chitty; Com. Dig. Ten. Vin. Ab. Time.

In general, when a statute speaks of a month without adding "calendar," or other words showing a contrary intention, it shall be intended a lunar month of twenty-eight days. See Com. Dig. Ann. (B.); Lacon v. Hooper, 6 T. R. 224; 3 East, 407; Crooke v. M^cTavish, 1 Bing. R. 307; and, generally, in all matters temporal, the term month is understood to mean lunar, but in matters ecclesiastical, as non-residence, it is deemed a calendar month; because, in each of these matters, a different mode of computation prevails: the term, therefore, is taken in that sense which is conformable to the subject-matter to which it is applied. 2 Roll. Ab. 521, 51; 1 Bla. R. 450; Lang v. Gale, 1 M. & S. 117; 1 Bing. R. 307; Com. Dig. Ann. (B.); and, therefore, when a deed states calendar months, and, in pleading, the word calendar be omitted, it is not necessarily a variance. 3 B. & B. 186; 2 Bla. Com. 140, notes by Chitty.

When a deed speaks of a month, it shall be intended a lunar month, unless it can be collected from the context that it was intended to be calendar. 1 M. & S. 111; Com. Dig. Ann. (B.); Cro. Jac. 167; 4 Mod. 185. So, in all other contracts, 4 Mod. 185, 1 Str. 446, unless it be proved that the general understanding in that department of trade is, that bargains of that nature are according to calendar months. 1 Str. 652; 1 M. & S. 111. And the custom of trade, as in case of bills of exchange and promissory notes, has established, that a month named in those contracts shall be deemed calendar. 3 B. & B. 187.

In all legal proceedings, as in commitments, pleadings, &c., a month means four weeks. 3 Burr. 1455; 1 Bla. R. 450; Dougl. 463, 446. When a calendar month's notice of action is required, the day on which it is served is occluded, and reckoned one of the days; and, therefore, if a notice be served on the 28th of April, it expires on the 27th of May, and the action may be commenced on the 28th May. 3 T. R. 623; 2 Campb. 294. And when a statute requires the action against an officer of customs to be brought within three months, they mean lunar, though the same act requires a calendar month's notice of action. Crooke v. M^cTavish, 1 Bingh. R. 307.

A day is natural, which consists of twenty-four hours; or artificial, which contains the time from the rising of the sun to the setting. Co. Lit. 135, a. A day.

A day is usually intended of a natural day: as, in an indictment for burglary, we say in the night of the same day. Co. Lit. 135, a.; 2 Inst. 318.

The question whether, in computing time from an act or event, the day is to be included or excluded, came under the consideration of Sir William Grant, in Lester v. Garland, 15 Ves. 247. All the authorities on the subject are there reviewed by him, who takes this distinction, that where the act done, from which the computation is made, is one to which the party against whom the time runs is privy, the day of the act done may reasonably be included; but here it is one to which he is a stranger, it ought to be excluded. He points out this as a distinction which will reconcile many of the cases. He observes, at in the case of a notice of action to be brought, the party necessarily knows the time at which he is served with the notice, and may immediately begin to consider of the propriety of preventing the action, by tendering amends. See, per Bayley, J., Hardy v. Ryle, 9 B. & Cres. 608.

When day excluded or included.

Where a party was improperly committed by a magistrate, and was discharged from imprisonment on the 14th of December, and the writ, in an action against the magistrate for such false imprisonment, was issued on the 14th June, it was held, the action was commenced within the six months limited by the 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 8. Hardy v. Ryle, 9 B. & Cres. 603.

In Pellew v. Inhabitants of Wonford, 9 B. & C. 134, an action was brought to recover damages for an injury done to premises maliciously set on fire. By the 9 Geo. I. c. 22, required notice to be given within two days after the injury done. The fire happened on Saturday, the notice was given on the Monday following, and the Court of King's Bench, acting upon the rule laid down by Sir William Grant, supra, held that the day of the happening of the event, from which the computation of time was to run, was to be included.

However, in a case in equity, the Master of the Rolls, after considering many of the decisions, said, upon the first part of this rule, that whatever dicta there may be that, when a thing is to be done after the doing of an act, the day of its happening must be included, it is clear the actual decision cannot be brought under any such a general rule; and he inclined for excluding the first day in all cases, and ruled, that where a security was to be given within six months after a testator's death, the day of the death was to be excluded. 15 Ves. 248.

When a month's notice of action is necessary, it begins with the day on which the notice is given. 3 T. R. 623; and see Hob. 139.

Sometimes days are calculated exclusively: as, where an act required ten clear days' notice of the intention to appeal, it was held that the ten days are to be taken exclusively both of the day of serving the notice and the day of holding the sessions. 3 B. & A. 581; Appeals, Vol. I. p. 144.

Fractions of a day.

As to fractions of a day, the Master of the Rolls, in Lester v. Gault, 15 Ves. 248, observes, "Our law rejects fractions of a day more generally than the civil law does. The effect is to render the day a sort of indivisible point; so that any act done in the compass of it is no more referable to any one than to any other portion of it; but the act and the day are co-extensive and therefore the act cannot be said to be past till the day is past." And see Hardy v. Ryle, 9 B. & C. 603. But though the law generally rejects fractions of a day (15 Ves. 257; Co. Lit. 135, b.; 9 East, 154; 4 T. R. 611; 11 East, 496, 498; 3 Rep. 36, a.), yet it admits it in cases where it is necessary to distinguish for the purposes of justice; and "I do not see why the very hour may not be so too, where it is necessary, and can be done; for it is not like a mathematical point, which cannot be divided." Per Ld. Mansfield 3 Burr. 1434; 9 East, 154; 3 Rep. 36, a. Therefore, a fraction of a day was admitted in support of a commission of bankruptcy, by allowing evidence that the act of bankruptcy, though on the same day, was previous to issuing the commission. 3 Ves. 8. So, where goods are seized under a fieri facias, the same day that the party commits an act of bankruptcy, it is open to inquire at what time of the day the goods were seized and the act of bankruptcy was committed; and the validity of the execution depends on the actual priority. 4 Camp. 197; 2 B. & A. 586; 2 Bla. Com. 141, note by Chitty.

An hour.

An hour consists of sixty minutes. Com. Dig. Ann. (C). By a misprint: 2 Inst. 318, it is stated to be forty minutes. There is a distinction in law as to the certainty of stating a month, or day, or an hour. When a fact took place, circa horum is sufficient; but not so as to a day, which must be stated with precision, though it may be varied from in proof. 2 Inst. 318; 2 Bla. Com. 140, notes by Chitty.

I. Summary Remedy for Tithes due from any Person.

THE books in general confound the 7 & 8 Wil. III. c. 6, concerning small tithes only, due from any person whatsoever (whether Quaker or not, being no way material), with the 7 & 8 Wil. III. c. 34, and 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 6, concerning Quakers' tithes only, great and small, and their other church dues. Nevertheless, the acts are entirely distinct in themselves, and the method of proceeding in the one case and in the other is different in almost every instance. Care has therefore been taken to extricate them out of this confusion, by inserting them separately, and by drawing distinct forms upon each, according to the different methods of proceeding.

Summary remedy for tithes due from any person.

The 7 & 8 Wil. III. c. 6 (which we shall presently notice more fully), gives summary remedy, before two justices of the peace, for the more effectual recovery of small tithes, offerings, oblations, obventions, and compositions, where the same do not amount to above the yearly value of 40s. from any person.

The 53 Geo. III. c. 127, s. 4, post, p. 931, extends this summary remedy to all tithes whatever, whether great or small, where the value does not exceed 10*l*.

The 7 Geo. IV. c. 15, enacts, that in places where justices are pastors of the church, the tithes are to be recovered before justices of any adjoining county. See the enactment, post, p. 931.

By virtue of these statutes, if any persons subtract or fail in the payment of tithes for twenty days after demand thereof, the parson, vicar, or other person to whom they are due, may make his complaint in writing before any justice of the peace, who shall summon the persons against whom the complaint is made, before two justices of the peace, neither of whom is to be patron of the benefice to which the tithes belong, who are authorized to hear and determine all such complaints touching tithes, oblations, and compositions subtracted or withheld, where the value does not exceed 10*l*. See 2 Eagle on Tithes, 389.

"In principle, it is clear that this statute of Wil. was intended only to apply to those cases in which the tithes were actually due, independently of any dispute upon matters of law, either with regard to the person receiving them, or the manner of receiving them. We cannot doubt that this is the principle of the act. The object of it was to give to the owner of tithes an expeditious mode of recovering them; and it must be obvious that a cheap and expeditious remedy in such cases must be no less beneficial to the tithe owner than to him who is to pay. Every suit for subtraction of tithes, whether in a court of common law, or a court having ecclesiastical cognizance, is in its nature very expensive, and of course equally burdensome to him who claims and him who pays. One cannot doubt that it was to remedy this evil this act was passed." Per Abbott, C. J., R. v. Jeffery, 2 D. & R. 860; 1 B. & C. 604, S. C.; 3 Eag. & Y. 1098; Gw. 2065.

(a) See, in general, the late excellent work of Mr. Eagle on Tithes; Toller on Tithes; Eagle and Young; Mirehouse on Tithes.

DUE FROM ANY

It may be well to observe, that a party who abandons his complaint to the justices before any order is made, is not precluded from suing for the same tithes in the spiritual court. Manser v. Taylor, 2 Eagle on Tithes, 393; 3 Eag. & Y. 1275.

We will now proceed to notice the above statutes and the decisions thereon in detail.

Small tithes not paid in 30 days after demand, lawful to complain to two justices not interested, (a)

† See in act.

By the 7 & 8 Wil. III. c. 6, intituled "An Act for the more easy Recovery of small Tithes," after reciting that, "for the more easy and effectual recovery of small tithes, and the value of them, where the same shall be unduly subtracted† and detained, where the same do not amount to above the yearly value of 40s., from any one person:" (b) it is enacted, "that all and every person or persons shall henceforth well and truly set out and pay all and singular the tithes, commonly called the small tithes, and compositions and agreements for the same, with all offerings, oblations, and obventions, to the several rectors, vicars, and other persons, to whom they are or shall be due, in their several parishes within this kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, and town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, according to the rights, customs, and prescriptions commonly used within the said parishes respectively; and if any person or persons shall hereafter subtract or withdraw, or any ways fail in the true payment of such small tithes, offerings, oblations, obventions, or compositions as aforesaid, by the space of twenty days at most after demand thereof, then it shall and may be lawful for the person or persons, to whom the same shall be due, to make his or their complaint in writing unto two or more of his majesty's justices of the peace within that county, (c) riding, city, town corporate, place, or district where the same shall grow due; neither of which justices of peace is to be patron (c) of the church or chapel whence the said tithes do or shall arise, nor any ways interested in such tithes, offerings, oblations, obventions, or compositions aforesaid."

who may summon the persons complained of, and on default of appearance determine the complaint, &c.

Sect. 2. "That if hereafter any suit or complaint shall be brought to two or more justices of the peace as aforesaid, concerning small tithes, offerings, oblations, obventions, or compositions as aforesaid, the said justices are hereby authorized and required to summon, in writing under their hands and seals, by reasonable warning, every such person or persons against whom any complaint shall be made as aforesaid, and after his or their appearance, or upon default of their appearance, the said warning or summons being proved before them upon oath, the said justices of peace, or any two or more of them, shall proceed to hear and determine the said complaint, and upon the proofs, evidences, and testimonies, produced before them, shall, in writing under their hands and seals, adjudge the case, and give such reasonable allowance and composition for such tithes, oblations, and compositions so subtracted or withheld, as they shall judge to be just and reasonable, and also such costs and charges, not exceeding 10s., as upon the merits of the cause shall appear just."

On refusal to pay in ten days after notice, the constables, &c. may distrain.

Sect. 3. "That if any person or persons shall refuse or neglect, by the space of ten days after notice given, to pay or satisfy any such sum of money, as by such complaint and proceeding shall by two or more justices of the peace be adjudged as aforesaid, in every such case the constables and churchwardens of the said parish, or one of them, shall, by warrant under the hands and seals of the said justices to them directed, distrain the goods and chattels of the person so refusing or neglecting as aforesaid, and after detaining them by the space enacts, that where justices are present of the church, tithes are to be recovered before justices of any adjoining county.

Sect. 4. "Provided that it shall and may be lawful for all justices of peace, in the examination of all matters offered to them by this act, to administer an oath or oaths to any witness or witnesses, where the same shall be necessary for their information, and for the better discovery of the truth."

Sect. 5. "Provided, that this act, or anything herein contained, shall not extend to any tithes, oblations, payments, or obventions, within the city of London, or liberties thereof, nor to any other city or town corporate where the same are settled by any act of Parliament in that case particularly made and provided."

Sect. 6. "Provided that no complaint for or concerning any small tithes, offerings, oblations, obventions, or compositions, hereafter due, shall be heard and determined by any justices of the peace, by virtue of this act, unless the complaint shall be made within the space of two years next after the times that the same tithes, oblations, obventions, and compositions, did become due or payable; anything in this act contained to the contrary notwithstanding."

No complaint to be heard unless made within two years.

Sect. 7. "Provided, that any person finding him, her, or themselves aggrieved, by any judgment to be given by any two justices of the peace, shall and may appeal to the next general quarter sessions to be held for that county, riding, city, town corporate, or division, and the justices of the peace there present, or the major part of them, shall proceed finally to hear and determine the matter, and to reverse the said judgment if they shall see cause; and if the justices then present, or the major part of them, shall find cause to confirm the judgment given by the first two justices of the peace, they shall then decree the same by order of sessions, and shall also proceed to give such costs against the appellant, to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the said appellant, as to them shall seem just and reasonable; and no proceedings, or judgments had or to be had by virtue of this act, shall be removed or superseded by virtue of any writ of certiorari, or other writ out of his majesty's courts at Westminster, or any other court whatsoever, unless the title of such tithes, oblations, or obventions, shall be in question; any law, statute, custom, or usage, to the contrary notwithstanding."

Persons aggrieved may appeal to the sessions.

If judgment be confirmed, justices to give costs, &c.

Sect. 8. "That where any person or persons complained of for substracting or withholding any small tithes, or other duties aforesaid, shall, before the justices of the peace to whom such complaint is made, insist upon any prescription, composition, or modus decimandi, agreement, or title, whereby he or she is or ought to be freed from payment of the said tithes, or other dues in question, and deliver the same in writing to the said justices of the peace, subscribed by him or her, and shall then give to the party complaining reasonable and sufficient security, to the satisfaction of the said justices, to pay all such costs and damages, as upon a trial at law to be had for that purpose, in any of his majesty's courts having cognizance of that matter, shall be given against him, her, or them, in case the said prescription, composition, or modus decimandi, shall not upon the said trial be allowed; that in that case the said justices of the peace shall forbear to give any judgment in the matter; and that then and in such case the person or persons so complaining shall and may be at liberty to prosecute such person or persons for their said substruction in any other court or courts whatsoever, where he, she, or they might have sued before the making of this act; anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding."

Persons complained of, insisting on any composition, &c. and giving security to pay costs, justices not to give judgment.

Sect. 9. "That every person and persons, who shall by virtue of this act obtain any judgment, or against whom any judgment shall be obtained, before any justices of the peace out of sessions, for small tithes, oblations, obventions, or compositions, shall cause or procure the said judgment to be enrolled at the next general quarter sessions to be holden for the said county, city, riding, or division; and the clerk of the peace for the said county, city, riding, or division, Persons removing, justices may certify the judgment, &c.

Sect. 10. "That if any person or persons, against whom any such judgment or judgments shall be had as aforesaid, shall remove out of the county, riding, city, or corporation, after judgment had as aforesaid, and before the levying the sum or sums thereby adjudged to be levied, the justices of the peace who made the said judgment, or one of them, shall certify the same, under his or their hands and seals, to any justice of peace of such other county, city, or place, wherein the said person or persons shall be inhabitants; which said justice is hereby authorized and required, by warrant under his hand and seal, to be directed to the constables or churchwardens of the place, or one of them, to levy the sum or sums so adjudged to be levied, as aforesaid, upon the goods and chattels of such person or persons, as fully as the said other justices might have done, if he, she, or they had not removed as aforesaid; which shall be paid according to the said judgment."

Justices may give costs not exceeding 10s.

Sect. 12. "That the said justices of the peace, who shall hear and determine any of the matters aforesaid, shall have power to give costs, not exceeding 10s., to the party prosecuted, if they shall find the complaint to be false and vexatious; which costs shall be levied in manner and form aforesaid."

Double costs.

Sect. 13. "Provided, that if any person or persons shall be sued for anything done in execution of this act, and the plaintiff in such suit shall discontinue his action, or be nonsuit, or a verdict pass against him, that then, in any of the said cases, such person or persons shall recover double costs."

Suits for tithes not exceeding 40s., to have no benefit by this act.

Sect. 14. "Provided always, that any clerk, or other person or persons, who shall begin any suit for recovery of small tithes, oblations, or obventions, not exceeding the value of 40s., in his majesty's Court of Exchequer, or in any of the ecclesiastical courts, shall have no benefit by this act, or any clause in it, for the same matter for which he or they have so sued."

Certiorari.

With regard to the writ of certiorari, it seems a doubtful question whether the word "title" is to be taken in a strict sense, as applying merely to those cases in which the question is to whom the tithes are due, or whether it extends to a question of prescription, modus, custom, or other exemption, which does not negative the prima facie title, but only operates as a legal bar to the demand of tithes. From what fell from Abbott, C. J., in R. v. Jefferys, infra, it should seem the word "title" ought to be taken in its strict sense. See vide R. v. Furness, 11 Mod. 320; 1 Str. 264; 1 E. & Y. 750.

Before a certiorari issues, it must be shown that the title was really in question. R. v. Wakefield, 1 Burr.; 2 E. & Y. 153; Constitution, Vol. I. p. 322.

Questions of modus.

The sessions, on an appeal, may reject evidence of a modus which was not offered to the two justices who made the order. It seems, also, that the power of justices to try questions of tithe under the 7 & 8 Wil. III. c. 6, is taken away by the eighth section of that act, where a question of modus is raised. R. v. Jefferys, 1 B. & C. 604; 2 D. & R. 860; 3 E. & Y. 1098, S. C. The justices, by an order dated the fifth day of November, 1821, ordered Jefferys to pay to the lessee of the tithes of the parish of Glemsford, in the county of Suffolk, the sum of 6*l.* for his tithe of milk and calves, arising in the parish of Glemsford, and due to the lessee, together with his costs and charges. Jefferys was duly summoned to answer the complaint of the lessee, and appeared before the justices, but offered no evidence of a modus. The sessions, on appeal, confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the court upon the following case:—The respondent having proved the notice, summons, and order, and his title as lessee, and that the value of the tithe was of the amount demanded, the appellant claimed to be exempted from the payment of the tithe, inasmuch as it was covered by a modus, and he tendered evidence to prove the existence of such a modus. The court rejected the evidence, being of opinion that they had no power to try the question. Abbott, C. J., after argument, said, "As at present advised, I am disposed to think that by modus, in this statute, something different from title is meant. And as the word modus is not to be found in the seventh section, which relates to the certiorari, I think that the writ ought not to have issued. I am also disposed to think, that the eighth section is compulsory, that the party relying upon a modus shall set it up in the manner thereby directed. The act was intended to apply where there was no question of law as to the right to the tithe; that in such cases the party entitled might have a cheap remedy, which could not be injurious to the party from whom the tithe is due. If the eighth section be not compulsory, this consequence will follow, that the party called upon to pay may, at his will and pleasure, leave the question of modus to be tried by the justices, or may withdraw it from their consideration; whereas the other side can have no such option. This, however, is a point of great consequence, and I should have wished for more time to consider it, if our judgment proceeded upon that ground. But upon the other point I entertain no doubt. If it was originally the intention of the party to set up a modus, he should have stated that before the two justices. In making a claim of tithes, the party would come prepared to show he occupation of land by the party refusing to pay, and that titheable matter was produced. A question of modus is something quite distinct from that which the party claiming would come prepared to prove. If, therefore, the modus was not set up in the first instance, the justices at sessions might exercise their discretion as to receiving or rejecting evidence of it. The claimant might otherwise be taken by surprise, and the defendant would obtain a very unfair advantage." Order of sessions affirmed.

DUE FROM ANY PERSON.

The 53 Geo. III. c. 127, s. 4, (a) after reciting the 7 & 8 Wil. III. as to recovery of small tithes, to the value of 40s., and that it was expedient to enlarge such amount, and to extend the said amount to all tithes whatsoever of certain limited amount, enacts, "That such justices of the peace shall, from and after the passing of this act, be authorized and required to hear and determine all complaints touching tithes, oblations, and compositions, substracted or withheld, where the same shall not exceed 10*l.* in amount from any one person, in all such cases, and by all such means, and subject to all such provisions and remedies, by appeal or otherwise, as contained in the said act of King William, touching small tithes, oblations, and compositions not exceeding 40s.: provided nevertheless, that, from and after the passing of this act, one justice of the peace shall be competent to receive the original complaint, and to summon the parties to appear before two or more justices of the peace, as in the said act is set forth."

Justices of peace may determine complaints respecting tithes not exceeding 10*l.*

Sect. 5. "That, from and after the passing of this act, no action shall be brought for the recovery of any penalty for the not setting out tithes, nor any action instituted in any court of equity, or in any ecclesiastical court, to recover the value of any tithes, unless such action shall be brought or such suit commenced within six years from the time when such tithes became due."

Limitation of actions respecting tithes.

By the 7 Geo. IV. c. 15, intituled 'An Act to amend an Act passed in the 14th and Seventh Years of the Reign of King William the Third, for the more easy Recovery of small Tithes,' reciting the 6 & 7 Wil. III. c. 6, s. 1, and the 53 Geo. III. c. 127, s. 4, and that it is expedient, in certain cases, to alter and amend that part of the said recited act of King William the Third, which relates to the jurisdiction before which the said tithes shall be recovered, and enacted, "that from and after the passing of this act, it shall and may be lawful, in all cities, towns corporate, or other towns or places in England, Wales, or Berwick-upon-Tweed, where the justices of the peace in and for the same are patrons of the said church or chapel, where any tithes or offerings do or shall arise, for two justices of the peace in and for any adjoining county, city, or division, to hear and determine all complaints for withholding the said tithes and offerings not exceeding the amount of 10*l.*; such complaint to be made in writing by the said rector or vicar, or other person, his attorney, or agent."

7 Geo. 4, c. 15.

In places where justices are patrons of church, tithes to be recovered before justices of any adjoining county.

Costs of distresses.

Sect. 2. And, "that nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal or alter any of the clauses or provisions of the said recited acts, or either of them, save and except as to such parts thereof as are expressly altered or amended by the same."

By the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 17, the provisions of the 57 Geo. III. c. 93, relative to the costs of small distresses, are extended to distresses for tithes. See Vol. I. p. 630.

II. Summary Remedy for Tithes and other Church-Rates and Payments due from Quakers only.

7 & 8 Wil. 3, c.
Complaint.

By the 7 & 8 Wil. III. c. 34, s. 4, it is enacted, that where any Quaker shall refuse to pay or compound for any tithes, or to pay any church-rates (or by the 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 6, s. 2, for any customary or other rights, dues, or payments belonging to any church or chapel, which of right by law and custom ought to be paid for the stipend or maintenance of any minister or curate officiating in any church or chapel), any parson, vicar, curate, farmer, or proprietor of such tithes, or any churchwarden or chapelwarden, or other person who ought to have, receive, or collect any such tithes, rates, dues, or payments, may make complaint (a) to any two justices, other than such as is parson of the church or chapel, or any way interested in the tithes.

Summons.

Upon which complaint the said justices shall summon (b) in writing, under their hands and seals, by reasonable warning, such Quaker. (And by the 53 Geo. III. c. 127, s. 6, it is provided, that one justice of the peace shall be competent to receive the original complaint, and to summon the parties to appear before two or more justices of the peace, as in the said act is set forth.)

Hearing.

And after appearance, or on default of appearance (the warning or summons being proved before them upon oath), they may proceed to examine on oath (or in such manner as by this act is provided) the truth of the complaint, and to ascertain and state what is due and payable.

Adjudication and costs.

And, by order (c) under their hands and seals, they may direct and appoint the payment thereof; so as the sum ordered (as is aforesaid) do not exceed 10*l*. (And by the 53 Geo. III. c. 127, s. 6, all the provisions of the said acts of Wil. III. and Geo. I. shall be deemed and taken to extend to any value not exceeding 50*l*.) And also such costs and charges as they shall think reasonable, not exceeding 10*s*.

Distress and sale.

And, on refusal to pay, it shall be lawful for any one of the next two justices, by warrant (d) under his hand and seal, to levy the same by distress and sale of the goods of such offender, his executors or administrators, rendering the overplus, the necessary charges of distraining being thereout first deducted and allowed by the said justice: unless it be in the case of appeal, and then no warrant of distress shall be granted till after the appeal shall be determined.

Therefore, it seemeth best not to make out, at least not to execute, the warrant of distress, until after the next sessions.

Note again: here is no time limited for detaining the distress, nor charge allowed for the keeping of it; so that it may be sold immediately.

27 Geo. 3, c. 20.

And by the 27 Geo. II. c. 20, which, in all other cases, gives the justice power, in their warrant of distress, to order the goods distrained to be detained for a certain time, not less than four days, the tithes and church-rates of Quakers (although not those other dues and payments above mentioned) are excepted.

7 & 8 Wil. 3, c.

Also, it is observable here, that the 7 & 8 Wil. III. c. 67, limits the proceeding to the two next justices (not interested); and the statute of the 1 Geo. enacts the same to any two justices (not interested) as to the complaint, summons, and order, but restrains the distress to the limitations in the statute of the 7 & 8:

(a) See Form (No. 6), post.

(b) See Form (No. 7), post.

(c) See Form (No. 8), post.

(d) See Form (No. 9), post.

Wil.,—that is, to one of the two next justices as aforesaid; which possibly may have been an oversight, for it may happen hereupon that neither of the two justices which made the order can enforce the execution of it by distress. To prevent which inconvenience, it may be proper that one at least of the justices complained to be one of the two next justices (not interested).

Now, however, by the 7 Geo. IV. c. 15, ante, p. 931, in places where justices are interested as patrons of the church, the tithes may be recovered before justices of any adjoining county.

Sect. 7. Any person aggrieved by the judgment of the two justices may appeal to the next sessions; where, if the judgment shall be affirmed, they shall decree the same by order of sessions, and give costs against the appellant, to be levied by distress and sale, as to them shall seem reasonable.

And no proceedings herein shall be removed by certiorari, or otherwise, unless the title of such tithes shall be in question. Appeal. Certiorari.

An order of two justices was made against three persons, being Quakers, for the payment of certain customary payments, called chapel salary, to the Rev. Mr. Smith, curate of the chapel of Burnside, in Westmoreland, where the said Quakers had estates chargeable with the said payments. On appeal to the sessions, the order was confirmed. The Quakers moved for a certiorari, and though cause was shown against the issuing of it, yet a certiorari was granted; and the return was filed, and exceptions were taken to it, and argued at the bar. Lord Mansfield, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court; "That the certiorari ought not to have issued at all; that the return should be taken off the file, and all proceedings thereon fall to the ground; and that the orders of the justices and sessions should be remanded. The order of the justices (he observed) was made on the 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 6, which extends the 7 & 8 Wil. c. 34, concerning tithes, to all customary payments due to clergymen. Those two acts are to be taken together as one law. They were intended for the benefit of the Quakers; to prevent their being liable to expensive suits for refusing to pay tithes upon scruples of conscience, by giving an apparent compulsory method of levying tithes and other customary payments in a summary way. This proceeding cannot be removed by certiorari, unless the title to these customary payments comes in question; and on this proviso the present question arises. The affidavits read on the original motion for the certiorari set forth, that before the justices and the sessions the defendants controverted the right of the curate to these customary payments. The affidavits against the certiorari say, that these payments have been made from time immemorial; that no inhabitant ever disputed it but these Quakers; that they have enjoyed the messuages but a few years; and that the former inhabitants never disputed the right of the parson. Taking these affidavits together, it is clear that the Quakers controvert the right to the customary only, as all Quakers controvert the payment of all dues to all clergymen upon scruples of conscience, which is the case directly within the act, and the proceeding must therefore follow the directions of the act. The Quakers themselves have acknowledged the jurisdiction of the justices by appealing to the sessions; whereas, had they intended to dispute the title to these customary payments, they would at first have removed the order of two justices by certiorari. The only difficulty remaining arises from the return being already filed. But there are several instances of this court superseding a certiorari after the return filed; where an order of justices is removed, and it appears, upon the return, that the parties had a right to appeal to the sessions, and that the time for appealing was not expired when the certiorari issued; in such case, this court supercedes the writ of certiorari, quia improvidè emanavit. The same must be done in the present case." R. v. Roger Wakefield and others, H. T., 31 Geo. II.

III. Of Contempts for Tithes in the Spiritual Court.

Contempt of process.

By the 27 Hen. VIII. c. 20, s. 1, if the ecclesiastical judge shall, for any contempt, contumacy, disobedience, or other misdemeanor of any defendant in the case of tithes, make information and request to the justices of the peace of the shire where the offender dwelleth, to assist him to order and reform any such person, two of the said justices (one being of the quorum), may cause the person to be attached, and commit him to ward, till he shall have found sufficient surety, to be bound to the king by recognizance or otherwise, to give obedience to the due process, proceedings, decrees, and sentences of the ecclesiastical court where the suit shall be.

Contempt after judgment.

And by the 32 Hen. VIII. c. 7, s. 4, if any person, after sentence definitive given against him in the ecclesiastical court, shall obstinately and wilfully refuse to pay his tithes, or duties, or sums of money adjudged for the same, two justices (one being of the quorum), may, upon information, certificate, or complaint in writing, by the ecclesiastical judge, cause the party refusing to be attached and committed to the next gaol, till he shall have found sufficient sureties, by recognizance or otherwise, to perform the said definite sentence and judgment.

See the 53 Geo. III. c. 127, ante, 931; Vol. I. p. 928.

Tobacco.

[12 Car. II. c. 34; 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 26.]

Planting tobacco. BY the 12 Car. II. c. 34, s. 1, no person shall plant any tobacco, on pain of forfeiting the same, or the value thereof, or 40s. for every rod or pole of ground planted with it; half to the king and half to him that shall sue in any court of record. (a)

Justices of the peace are to command all constables, &c., to make a return to them of what tobacco is planted, and upon whose land.

And by the 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 26, s. 2. (which by the 5 Geo. I. c. 11, is continued along with the act of tonnage and poundage of the 12 Car. II. c. 4), it is enacted, that "all justices of the peace, within their several limits and jurisdictions, shall and do, a month before every general quarter-sessions to be holden for their respective counties, issue forth their warrants to all high constables, petty constables, and tithingmen within their several limits, thereby requiring the said high constables, petty constables, and tithingmen, and every of them, to make diligent search and inquisition, what tobacco is then sown, set, planted, growing, curing, cured, or made, within their several and respective limits and jurisdictions, and by whom; and to make a true and lawful presentment in writing upon oath, at the next general quarter-sessions to be holden for such county, of the names of all such persons as have sown, set, planted, cured, or made, any tobacco, and what the full quantity of land is or was sown, set, or planted therewith, and who are the immediate tenant or tenants, or present occupiers of the land so sown, set, or planted, who are and shall be deemed planters thereof to all intents and purposes."

Which presentment, being filed, shall be a sufficient conviction.

Except upon notice it shall be traversed.

Sec. 3. "Which said presentment upon oath shall be received and filed by the clerk of the peace of the said county in open sessions, and, after such receipt and filing, shall be a sufficient conviction in law, to all intents and purposes, of all such persons as shall be so presented for the sowing, setting, planting, improving to grow, making, or curing tobacco, either in seed, plant, leaf, or otherwise, contrary to the said recited acts, or either of them, unless such person or persons so presented (having notice given to him or them of such presentment made, by the delivery of a copy of such presentment to him or them, or by leaving a copy of such presentment at his or their dwelling-house or houses, or usual place of abode, in the presence of one or more credible witnesses, ten days at the least before the next quarter-sessions) shall, at the quarter-sessions next after such notice shall be given to him or them, traverse such presentment, and find sufficient sureties for the prosecuting and trying such traverse, at the quarter-sessions to be holden for the said county next after such traverse shall be entered or made."

Power given to all officers, &c., to pull up and destroy all the plants, &c.

Sec. 4. "That all constables, tithingmen, bailiffs, and other public officers shall and do, within their respective jurisdictions, from time to time, as often as occasion shall require, within fourteen days after warrant from two or more of the justices of the peace within such county, town, city, or place, to them calling to their assistance such person or persons as they and every one of them shall find convenient and necessary, pluck up, burn, consume, tear in pieces and utterly destroy all tobacco seed, plant, leaf, planted, sowed, or growing in any field, earth, or ground."

The penalty of officers not doing their duty in destroying of it.

Sec. 5. "If any such tobacco shall be suffered or permitted to grow, or consumed in seed, plant, or leaf, in any township, tithing, parish, hamlet, or place, by the space of fourteen days after the receipt of such warrant or order"

(a) The 6 Geo. IV. c. 105, repeals so much of the 15 Car. II. c. 7, as hath then remained unrepealed.

rants, by the said constables, tithingmen, bailiffs, or other public officers of the respective townships, tithings, parishes, or hamlets as aforesaid; that then such constables, tithingmen, bailiffs, or other public officers respectively, shall, for every such offence, forfeit and pay the sum of 5*s.* for every rod, perch, or pole of ground so set, planted, or sowed with tobacco, and so proportionably for a greater or lesser quantity of ground; the one moiety thereof to the king's majesty, and the other moiety to him or them that shall sue for the same, to be recovered by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of his majesty's courts of record at Westminster."

c. 28.

Sect. 6. "That in case any person or persons shall refuse or neglect to aid or assist (being thereunto required) any constable, bailiff, or other public officer, in the due execution of this act, that every such person or persons for every such offence, upon conviction thereof made before two justices of the peace of the said county where such offence shall be committed, shall forfeit and pay the sum of 5*s.*, to be levied by warrant from the said justices, by distress and sale of the offender's goods; and, in case no distress can be found, then every such offender shall be committed to the common gaol of the said county, there to remain for the space of one week, without bail or mainprize."

The penalty for refusing to assist the officers.

Sect. 7. "And if any person or persons whatsoever shall forcibly resist any constable, bailiff, or other public officer, or other person or persons whatsoever, in the due execution of this act, that then every such person, for every such offence, upon conviction thereof made before two justices of the peace of the said county where such offence shall be committed, shall forfeit and pay the sum of 5*l.*, to be levied by warrant from the said justices, by distress and sale of the offender's goods; and in case no distress can be found, then every such offender shall be committed to the common gaol of the said county, there to remain for the space of three months, without bail or mainprize."

The forfeiture for resisting the officers.

Sect. 9. "Provided, that this act, nor anything therein contained, shall extend to the hindering of the planting of tobacco in any physic garden of either University, or in any other private garden for physic or chirurgery only, so as the quantity so planted exceed not one-half of one pole in any one place or garden."

+ Sic in act.
A saving for tobacco planted in the physic gardens.

Torn.

See Text, Vol. III.

[9 Hen. III. c. 35; Magna Charta, c. 17; 52 Hen. III. c. 10; 13 Edw. I. c. 13; 1 Edw. III. c. 17; 31 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 15; 1 Edw. IV. c. 2.]

THE sheriff's torn is the king's court of record holden before the sheriff, for the redressing of common grievances within the county. 2 Haw. c. 10, s. 2.

Torn, what.

And forasmuch as the sheriff did go in the circuit twice every year throughout every hundred within the county, it was called tour or tourn, which signifieth a circuit or perambulation. 2 Inst. 70.

Meaning of the word.

By the 31 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 15, the sheriff shall make his turn yearly, once within a month after Easter, and another time within a month after Michaelmas; and if he holds it in other manner, he shall lose his turn for the time: that is, the court so holden for that time shall be void, and the sheriff shall lose the profit thereof. 2 Inst. 71.

When to be holden.

And by the 9 Hen. III. c. 35, he shall keep his turn nowhere but in due place and accustomed.

Where to be holden.

By the statute of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. III. c. 10, archbishops, bishops, earls, barons, men of religion, or women, shall not need to come to the sheriff's turn, unless their presence be specially required for some cause; and if any have tenements in divers hundreds, they shall not need to come to the turn but in the bailiwicks where they dwell. See 2 Haw. c. 10, s. 11.

Who need not appear at the torn.

FORM.	Tenants in ancient demesne are privileged by the common law from coming to this court, unless they and their ancestors have time out of mind used to come to it. Also, parsons of churches have the like privilege by the common law. 2 Haw. c. 10, s. 11.
Who are to appear at the torn.	But all other persons, being above the age of twelve years, are bound to attend at such courts, in order to make inquiry of all common grievances, and also give security to the public for their good behaviour, by taking an oath to be faithful to the king, and to observe his laws, and also by incorporating themselves into some free pledge or tithing, which formerly signified a certain number of families living together in the same precinct, the masters whereof were every one of them mutually bound for each other, and punishable for the default of any member of any such family in not appearing to answer for himself on any accusation made against him. 2 Haw. c. 10, s. 2.
Jurors.	The 6 Geo. IV. c. 30, repeals the 1 Rich. III. c. 4, relating to jurors. If the defendant except not to an unqualified juror upon his arraignment, he is concluded by that omission. 2 Hale, 70.
Indictments to be indented.	By the 13 Edw. I. st. 2, c. 13, the jury shall put their seals to their indictments. By the 1 Edw. III. c. 17, indictments in the torn shall be by roll indented, one part to remain with the indictors, and the other with him that takes the inquest.
Distress and sale.	It seems to be settled at this day, that a distress is incident of common right to every fine and amerciamment in the torn; and that the offender's goods may be distrained in any lands within the precinct of the court, or in the highway; and that the goods distrained may be sold. But the bailiff must have a special warrant to make distress. 2 Haw. c. 10, s. 25.
Within what time offences are cognizable in the torn.	Or the fine may be recovered by action of debt. Id. s. 31. But no offence is cognizable in the torn, unless it arise since the holding of the last court. Id. s. 50.
Traverse.	It seems to be agreed, that a presentment in the torn of any offence within the jurisdiction of the court, being neither capital nor concerning any freehold, subjects the party to a fine or amerciamment, without any traverse. Id. s. 76.
Indictment to be certified to the sessions.	By Magna Charta , 9 Hen. III. c. 17, the sheriff is restrained in his torn from hearing and determining indictments of felonies; yet the sheriffs did commonly make out process or precepts in nature of a capias to arrest the parties; but, by 1 Edw. IV. c. 2, their power of making out process upon these indictments is taken away as well in cases of indictments of felony as other misdemeanors within their cognizance; but they are to deliver all such indictments and presentments to the next sessions, who are to make out process thereupon, and hear and determine them. 2 Hale, 71.
Constables chosen in the torn.	And the estreats of the fines thereupon shall be enrolled, and by indenture be delivered to the sheriff, to the use of him that was sheriff at the time of the indictment so taken in the torn as aforesaid.
	The constables of common right are to be chosen and sworn in the torn or leet. 2 Haw. c. 10, s. 37. See title Leet , Vol. III.

Transportation.

See Judgment, Vol. III.

TRANSPORTATION, or exile, is generally regarded as next to death in the scale of punishment, though, perhaps, it amounts to scarcely any punishment at all, in the estimation of many of those criminals who actually endure it. It was altogether unknown as a penalty to the common law of England. 2 H. Bla. 223; 3 P. Wms. 38; 1 Bla. Com. 137. The only case in which it arose seems to have been that of abjuration, where the party accused fled to a sanctuary, confessed his crime, and took an oath to leave the kingdom at the port assigned him, and never to return without permission of his majesty. 4 Bla. Com. 833. This was evidently not a punishment, but a condition of pardon, for it was expressly contended [by Magna Charta, that no freeman shall be banished unless by the judgment of his peers or by the law of the land. 9 Hen. III. st. I. c. 29.

Preliminary observations.

It appears that exile was first introduced as a punishment by the legislature in the thirty-ninth year of Queen Elizabeth, when a statute (39 Eliz. c. 4), enacted, that such rogues as were dangerous to the inferior people should be banished the realm, Barr. Acrh. stat. 445, (5 Edw.); and that the first statute in which the word transportation is used, is the 18 Car. II. c. 3, which gives a power to the judges, at their discretion, either to execute or transport to America, for life, the moss-troopers of Cumberland and Northumberland. 2 Wood, 498; and see 22 Car. II. c. 5; 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 7. The act 18 Car. II. was made perpetual by the 31 Geo. II. c. 42. See 1 Comm. c. 9, p. 137, n.

Transportation was first brought into general use as a punishment anno 1718, by the 4 Geo. I. c. 11, and continued by the 6 Geo. I. c. 23, which statute allowed the court a discretionary power to order felons who were by law entitled to their clergy, to be transported to the American plantations.

By these statutes, the persons contracting for the transportation of convicts to the colonies, or their assigns, had an interest in the service of each for seven or fourteen years, according to the term of transportation.

The principal act now in force regulating the transportation of offenders, is 5 Geo. IV. c. 84, infra, which revives and consolidates all the laws on the subject.

A judgment of transportation for fourteen years, if bad for excess, is bad in toto, and cannot operate as a judgment for seven years. R. v. Ellis, 8 D. & R. 173.

Judgment, if bad in part, bad in toto.

Where a court of quarter-sessions have passed an erroneous judgment of transportation, the Court of King's Bench will not send it back to be amended, but will reverse it, on writ of error. Id.

Erroneous judgment.

Where a prisoner was convicted of perjury, at the assizes at Chester, and the sentence of transportation was entered on record as follows:—"Wherefore," &c. "it is ordered that the said L. R. be transported to the coast of New South Wales, for and during the term of seven years," it was held, on error brought, that this was no judgment, but merely an order. R. v. Kemworthy, 1 B. & C. 711; 3 D. & R. 173, S. C.

What a mere order, and not a judgment.

By the 5 Geo. IV. c. 84, intituled "An Act for the Transportation of Offenders from Great Britain," after reciting that "whereas the several laws in force for regulating the transportation of offenders from Great Britain will expire at the end of the present session of Parliament; and it is expedient that the laws relative to that subject should be revised and consolidated into one act;" it is enacted, "that this act shall take effect on the last day of this present session of Parliament; and that, on and from that day, all things remaining to be done, touching the punishment, imprisonment, correction, removal, transportation, discipline, employment, diet, and clothing, of persons sentenced or ordered to transportation or banishment from any part of Great Britain, under any acts heretofore or now in force, or pardoned on condition of being transported under any such acts, shall be continued, done, and completed under the provisions of this act; and that all sentences and orders for transportation, all orders in council, and other orders, warrants, instructions, directions, appointments, authorities, contracts, and securities made, issued, or given under any of the said acts, and in force at the time of the commencement of this act, shall continue in force under and by virtue of this act, unless and until they shall be revoked and superseded."

5 Geo. 4, c. 84. Commencement of act under the provisions of which all persons already sentenced or ordered for transportation shall be placed.

5 Geo. 4, c. 84.

Offenders adjudged for transportation to be transported under this act.

Power for subsequent court, &c. to allow conditional pardon in cases where his majesty extends mercy to the offender.

His majesty may appoint places of transportation.

Secretary of state to authorize persons to make contracts for transportation.

Sheriffs or gaolers, on receiving orders for removal of offenders for transportation, to deliver them over to the contractor, if free from distemper.

† Sic in act.

Sec. 2. "That from and after the commencement of this act, every person convicted before any court of competent jurisdiction in Great Britain, of any offence for which he or she shall be liable to be transported or banished, shall be adjudged and ordered to be transported or banished beyond the seas, for the term of life or years for which such offender shall be liable by any law to be transported or banished; and every sentence of transportation or banishment passed or to be passed on any offender in any court of competent jurisdiction in Great Britain, and every order for transportation or banishment made or to be made in pursuance of the sentence of any such court or other competent authority, shall subject the offender to be conveyed beyond the seas under the provisions of this act: and whenever his majesty shall be pleased to extend mercy to any offender convicted of any crime for which he or she is or shall be excluded from the benefit of clergy, upon condition of transportation beyond the seas, either for the term of life, or any number of years, and such intention of mercy shall be signified by one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state to the court before which such offender hath been or shall be convicted, or any subsequent court with the like authority, such court shall allow to such offender the benefit of a conditional pardon, and make an order for the immediate transportation of such offender; and in case such intention of mercy shall be so signified to the judge or justice before whom such offender hath been or shall be convicted, or to any judge of his majesty's court of King's Bench or Common Pleas, or to any Baron of the Exchequer of the degree of the coif in England, such judge, justice, or baron shall allow to such offender the benefit of a conditional pardon, and make an order for the immediate transportation of such offender, in the same manner as if such intention of mercy had been signified to the court during the term or session in or at which such offender was convicted; and such allowance and order shall be considered as an allowance and order made by the court before which such offender was convicted, and shall be entered on the records of the same court by the proper officer thereof, and shall be as effectual, to all intents and purposes, and have the same consequences, as if such allowance and order had been made by the same court during the continuance thereof: and every such order, and also every order made by the Court of Justiciary in Scotland for the transportation of any offender, whose sentence of death shall be remitted by his majesty, shall subject the offender to be conveyed beyond the seas under the provisions of this act."

Sec. 3. "That it shall be lawful for his majesty, by and with the advice of his privy council, from time to time, to appoint any place or places beyond the seas, either within or without his majesty's dominions, to which felons and other offenders under sentence or order of transportation or banishment shall be conveyed; and that, when any offenders shall be about to be transported or banished from Great Britain, one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state shall give orders for their removal to the ship to be employed for their transportation, and shall authorize and empower some person to make a contract for their effectual transportation to some of the places so appointed, and shall direct security to be given for their effectual transportation, in the manner hereinafter mentioned."

Sec. 4. "That the sheriff or gaoler receiving such order of removal shall by virtue thereof forthwith remove every offender to whom the same shall apply, and who, having been examined by an experienced surgeon or apothecary, shall appear to be free from any putrid or infectious distemper, and fit to be transported to the ship employed for his or her transportation, and there deliver every such offender to the contractor, together with a true copy, attested by such sheriff or gaoler, of the caption and order of the court by which each such offender was sentenced or ordered for transportation, containing the sentence or order of transportation of each such offender, by virtue whereof he or she shall be in the custody of such sheriff or gaoler; and also a certificate specifying concisely the description of his or her crime, his or her age, whether married or unmarried, his or her trade or profession, and an account of his or her behaviour in prison before and after trial, and the gaoler's observations on his or her temper and disposition, and such information concerning his or her connexions and former course of life as may have come to the gaoler's knowledge; and such contractor shall give a receipt in writing to the sheriff or gaoler, for the discharge of such sheriff or gaoler."

Sect. 5. "That every such contractor, with two sureties, shall, before any such offender shall be delivered to him to be transported, give security by bond to his majesty, that he will effectually transport, or cause to be transported, every offender included in his contract, to such place beyond the seas as shall be specified in the contract, and procure from the governor of the colony, or other person or persons to whom he shall be directed by one of the principal secretaries of state to deliver such offender, a certificate of the landing of such offender in that place, whereto he or she shall be ordered to be transported (death and casualties by sea excepted); and that such offender shall not be suffered to return to any part of the United Kingdom, by the wilful default of such contractor, or of any person employed by him."

5 Geo. 4, c. 84.
Persons undertaking to transport offenders to give proper security.

Sect. 6. "That if any such offender shall be guilty of misbehaviour or disorderly conduct on board of the ship in which he or she shall be transported, it shall be lawful for the surgeon or principal medical officer for the time being of such ship, to inflict or cause to be inflicted on such misbehaving or disorderly offender, such moderate punishment or correction as may be authorized by the instructions which he may receive from one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state: provided always, that no such punishment or correction shall be so inflicted, unless the master or principal officer for the time being of such ship shall first signify his approbation thereof in writing under his hand; and every such punishment or correction, together with the particulars of the offence for which the same is inflicted, and such written approbation as aforesaid, shall on the same day, in all cases, be entered by such master or principal officer as aforesaid, upon the log-book of the ship, under a penalty of 20*l.* for every neglect to make such entry, to be recovered to the use of the informer, by bill, plaint, or information in any court of record in England, or in one of the supreme courts of New South Wales, or Van Dieman's Land."

For punishment of transports misbehaving on this voyage.

"Provided, that whenever the transportation of any such offender shall take place in any ship belonging to his majesty, it shall be lawful for one of the principal secretaries of state, by warrant under his hand, to nominate some person or persons who shall have the custody of such offender during the voyage, and thereupon such offender may be delivered to such nominee or nominees, without any contract or security being required or given for the effectual transportation of such offender; and every such nominee shall have the like power of punishing misbehaviour and disorderly conduct in such offender during the voyage, as is hereby given to the surgeon of a ship specially employed for the transportation of offenders."

Secretary of state may give custody of offenders transported in king's ships, without security.

Sect. 8. "That so soon as any such offender shall be delivered to the governor of the colony, or other person or persons to whom the contractor, or such nominee or nominees as aforesaid, shall be so directed to deliver him or her, he property in the service of such offender shall be vested in the governor of the colony for the time being, or in such other person or persons; and it shall be lawful for the governor for the time being, and for such other person or persons, whenever he or they shall think fit to assign any such offender to any other person for the then residue of his or her term of transportation, and for such assignee to assign over such offender, and so as often as may be thought fit; and the property in the service of such offender shall continue in the governor for the time being, or in such other person or persons as aforesaid, or his or their assigns, during the whole remaining term of life or years for which such offender was sentenced or ordered to be transported: provided always, that for the purposes of this act, every person administering the government of a colony, by whatever name or title he may be denominated, shall be deemed to be the governor thereof."

Convicts adjudged by courts out of the United Kingdom to transportation, and convicts pardoned on condition of transportation, may, when brought to England, be imprisoned and transported.

Sect. 17, after reciting that "whereas by the laws in force in some parts of his majesty's dominions not within the United Kingdom, offenders convicted of certain offences are liable to be punished by transportation beyond the seas, and other convicts adjudged to suffer death in such parts of his majesty's dominions have received, or may receive his majesty's most gracious pardon, upon condition of transportation beyond the seas, and there may be no means of transporting such convicts to any of the places appointed by his majesty in council in that behalf, without first bringing them to England;" enacts, "that whenever any convict adjudged to transportation by any court or judge in any part of his majesty's dominions not within the United Kingdom, or any convict adjudged to suffer death by any such court or judge, and pardoned on condition of transportation, have been or shall be brought to England in order to be transported, it shall and may be lawful to imprison any such offender in any place of confinement, provided under the authority of this act, until such convict shall be transported, or shall become entitled to his liberty; and that so soon as every such convict shall be so imprisoned, all the provisions, rules, regulations, clauses, authorities, powers, penalties, matters, and things aforesaid, concerning the safe custody, confinement, treatment, and transportation of any offender convicted in Great Britain, shall extend, and be construed to extend, to every convict who may have been or may be hereafter adjudged to transportation by any court or judge in any part of his majesty's dominions not within the United Kingdom, and to every convict adjudged by any such court or judge to suffer death, and pardoned on condition of transportation, and brought to England in order to be transported, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if such convict had been convicted and sentenced at any session of gaol delivery holden for any county within England."

ceived in evidence, if verified by the seal of the court, or by the signature of the judge, or one of the judges of the court, without further proof."

By sect. 25, the act is not to extend to persons adjudged to be banished under the 60 Geo. III. c. 8, as to blasphemous and seditious libels. But now, by the 1 Wil. IV. c. 73, that part of the 60 Geo. III. is repealed.

Sect. 26. "And whereas it hath sometimes happened, that felons under sentence or order of transportation in New South Wales and the islands adjacent, have received from the governor or lieutenant-governor thereof remissions, either absolute or conditional, of the whole or of some part of the term of their transportation, and have by their industry acquired property, in the enjoyment whereof it is expedient to protect them; and the like may happen in future in the same colony, and in other colonies to which felons may be transported under and by virtue of this act: be it therefore enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for every felon under sentence or order of transportation, who hath received or shall receive any such remission as aforesaid from the governor or lieutenant-governor of New South Wales, or from the governor or lieutenant-governor of any other colony, who may be authorized to grant the same, while such felon shall reside in a place where he lawfully may reside under such sentence, order, or remission, and under the provisions of this act, to maintain any action or suit for the recovery of any property, real, personal, or mixed, acquired by such felon since his or her conviction, and for any damage or injury sustained by such felon since his or her conviction, not only in the courts of the colony or place where such felon shall lawfully reside, but also in the courts of this kingdom, and of all other his majesty's dominions; and if the defendant in any such action or suit shall plead or allege in his defence the plaintiff's or complainant's conviction of felony, and the plaintiff or complainant shall allege and prove that he or she hath received such remission as aforesaid, and is residing in some place consistent therewith and with the provisions of this act, a verdict shall pass, and judgment shall be given, for the plaintiff or complainant."

Sect. 27. "That if any suit or action shall be prosecuted in England, Wales, or Ireland, against any person for anything done in pursuance of this act, the defendant may plead the general issue, and give this act and the special matter in evidence at any trial to be had thereupon, and that the same was done by the authority of this act; and if a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or judgment shall in any manner be given against the plaintiff, the defendant shall recover treble costs, and have the like remedy for the same as any defendants have by law in other cases: and notwithstanding a verdict shall be given for the plaintiff in any such action, such plaintiff shall not have costs against the defendant, unless the judge before whom the trial shall be had shall certify his approbation of the verdict."

Sect. 28. "That all actions, suits, and prosecutions against any person for anything done in pursuance of this act, shall be commenced within six calendar months after the fact committed, and not otherwise; and if the fact was done within the body of any county, it shall be laid and tried in that county, and no other; and if done out of the body of any county, it shall be laid and tried in the county of Middlesex, and not elsewhere."

By sect. 29, from and after the commencement of this act, so much of the 4 Geo. I. c. 11, (a) as relates to contracts and security for the transportation of offenders, and to the punishment of those who return from transportation; and so much of the 6 Geo. I. c. 23, (a) as relates to the same objects; and the 16 Geo. II. c. 15, and 8 Geo. III. c. 15; and so much of the 28 Geo. III. c. 24, as relates to the transportation of offenders, and their removal to and imprisonment in temporary places of confinement (viz. sect. 4, 5); and so much of the 31 Geo. III. c. 46, as relates to the imprisonment and employment in hard labour of prisoners sentenced to transportation (viz. sect. 7); and the 43 Geo. III. c. 15, shall be repealed.

(a) The 7 Geo. IV. c. 27, repeals the rest of these two acts, except sections: viz. the 4 Geo. I. c. 11.

By the 1 Wil. IV. c. 39, entitled "An Act to amend an Act passed in the Fifth Year of his present Majesty, for the Transportation of Offenders from Great Britain, and for punishing Offences committed by Transports kept to Labour in the Colonies," passed 16th July, 1830, reciting that, by the 5 Geo. IV. c. 84, "it is amongst other things enacted, that it shall be lawful for his majesty, by and with the advice of his Privy Council, from time to time to appoint any place or places beyond the seas, either within or without his majesty's dominions, to which felons and other offenders under sentence or order of transportation or banishment shall be conveyed; and that, when any offenders shall be about to be transported or banished from Great Britain, one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state shall give orders for their removal to the ship to be employed for their transportation, and shall authorize and empower some person to make a contract for their effectual transportation to some of the places so appointed, and shall direct security to be given for their effectual transportation, in the manner thereafter mentioned; and it is thereby further enacted, that whenever the transportation of any such offender shall take place in any ship belonging to his majesty, it shall be lawful for one of the principal secretaries of state, by warrant under his hand, to nominate some person or persons who shall have the custody of such offender during the voyage, and thereupon such offender may be delivered to such nominee or nominees, without any contract or security being required or given for the effectual transportation of such offender; and it is thereby further enacted, that so soon as any such offender shall be delivered to the governor of the colony, or other person or persons to whom the contractor or such nominee or nominees, as aforesaid shall be so directed to deliver him or her, the property in the service of such offender shall be vested in the governor of the colony for the time being, or in such other person or persons as aforesaid: and whereas divers felons and other offenders have heretofore been transported from Great Britain to his majesty's colonies of South Wales and Van Diemen's Land respectively, and in pursuance of the directions of one of the principal secretaries of state have been delivered to the governors of those respective colonies, or other persons in those colonies to whom such respective contractors or nominees as aforesaid have been so directed to deliver them; but, from divers unforeseen causes, it hath occurred that some of such offenders have been landed and put on shore, and delivered at one of the before-mentioned colonies, who ought, according to such directions as aforesaid, to have been landed and put on shore, and delivered at the other of the before-mentioned colonies: and whereas, under the licenses of the governors of the said respective colonies, divers offenders who had been transported as aforesaid, have from time to time been removed from the one to the other of the said colonies: and whereas doubts have arisen whether offenders who have been so landed, put on shore, and delivered or removed as aforesaid, can, within the respective colonies in which they are now respectively resident, be lawfully dealt with in such and the same manner as if they were respectively resident within the colony to which they were originally sentenced or ordered to be transported:" it is enacted, "that all felons and other offenders who have heretofore been transported from Great Britain to New South Wales, or to Van Diemen's Land, or to their respective dependencies, and who, having been contracted or ordered to be landed, and put on shore, and delivered in one of those colonies, have in fact been landed, and put on shore, and delivered at the other of those colonies, and that all such felons and other offenders who, under the license, or by the order or with the consent of the governor, or of the officer administering the government of either of the said colonies, have been removed from the one to the other of such colonies, shall, within the colony in which they are respectively now resident, be subject and liable to all such and the same laws, rules, and regulations as if they had been contracted or ordered on their original transportation to be delivered to the governor or the officer administering the government of such colony, and shall within the colony in which they are respectively now resident be dealt with, governed, and disposed of in all respects, in such and the same manner, as other convicts within the same colony; and that the property in the service of all such offenders shall be vested in the governor Manner of proceeding in cases of extension of mercy to offenders convicted of capital offences.

Sect. 8. "And whereas, by the aforesaid act of the fifth year of his majesty's reign, power is given to his majesty to appoint a superintendent of places of confinement within England and Wales, and power also to appoint one fit and able person to be assistant or deputy of such superintendent, at one or more of the same places of confinement; and, by the said act, power is also given to remove male offenders convicted in Great Britain, and being under sentence or order of transportation, and to confine such offenders at land or on board any vessel to be provided by his majesty within the limits of any port or harbour in any part of his majesty's dominions out of England named in any order in council, under the management of the said superintendent, and of an overseer to be appointed by his majesty for each such vessel or other place of confinement; and whereas it is expedient that power should be given to his majesty to appoint an assistant or deputy to the said superintendent, in any such part of his majesty's dominions out of England: be it therefore enacted, that it shall be lawful for his majesty, in case it shall be deemed expedient, to appoint a fit and able person to be assistant or deputy to such superintendent, at any such place of confinement out of England named in any order in council, as aforesaid, to be constantly resident at or near the place to which he shall be appointed."

Power to appoint an assistant or deputy to the superintendent at places of confinement out of England.

pleasure, or under sentence of transportation in Scotland, to temporary places of confinement; and for the punishment of offenders escaping, or being at large, before the expiration of their sentences, and of persons rescuing them, or assisting them to escape; and was continued for two years from the twenty-fourth of March, 1821, to the end of the then next session of Parliament.—The statute 4 Geo. IV. c. 47, authorized the employment on public works in the colonies of male offenders convicted in Great Britain, and under sentence of transportation: but that statute, together with the 56 Geo. III. c. 27, expired on the last day of the session of 1824.

By statute 56 Geo. III. c. 63, passed for the purpose of regulating the general penitentiary for convicts at Millbank, in the county of Middlesex, s. 13, it is enacted, "that when the said penitentiary, or a sufficient part thereof, shall be fitted and completed for the reception of convicts, and proper officers shall be appointed for the care and management thereof, the said committee shall certify, under their hands and seals, to his majesty, through the said principal secretary of state for the home department, that such penitentiary is so fitted and completed; and that such officers have been appointed; and after the making of such certificate, it shall and may be lawful for his majesty, by an order in writing, to be notified by the said secretary of state, to direct, that any person who may be under sentence or order of transportation, for any offence committed within that part of the United Kingdom called England and Wales, and who, having been examined by an experienced surgeon or apothecary, shall appear to be free from any putrid or infectious distemper, and fit to be removed from the gaol or prison in which such person may be confined, shall be removed to the said penitentiary, there to remain and continue for and during the term of five years, in case such convict shall be under sentence or order of transportation for seven years only, and for and during the term of seven years, in case such convict shall be under such sentence or order for fourteen years; and for and during the term of ten years, in case such convict shall be under such sentence or order for life."

Sect. 14. "Provided, that in case any convict shall be removed to the said penitentiary, who, having been under sentence or order of transportation for the term of seven years, shall previously to his or her being removed to the said penitentiary, have been kept confined in some other gaol or prison, during a part of such term, such convict shall be confined in the said penitentiary under this act, for five-seventh parts of the residue of his or her term of seven years' transportation, remaining unexpired, when he or she shall be received into the said penitentiary; excluding, nevertheless, from the computation of such reduced period of confinement, any fractional part of a week which may result from such reduction; and in case any convict shall be removed to the said penitentiary, who, having been under sentence or order of transportation for the term of fourteen years, shall, previously to his or her being so removed, have been kept confined in some other gaol or prison during a part of such term, such convict shall be confined in the said penitentiary under this act for one half of the residue of his or her term of fourteen years' transportation remaining unexpired, when he or she shall be received into the said penitentiary; excluding, nevertheless, from the computation of such reduced period of confinement any fractional part of a day which may result from such reduction; and in case of any convict who, having been under sentence or order of transportation for life, shall be removed to the said penitentiary for the term of ten years as aforesaid, such term of ten years shall be computed from the time of his or her being received into the said penitentiary."

Sect. 43. "That if any convict who shall be ordered to be confined in the said penitentiary, shall at any time during the term of such confinement break prison, or escape from the place of his or her confinement, or in his or her conveyance to such place of confinement, or from the person or persons having the lawful custody of such convict, he or she so breaking prison or escaping shall be punished by an addition of three years to the term for which he or she at the time of his or her breach of prison or escape was subject to be confined; and if such convict so punished by such addition to the term of confinement shall afterwards be convicted of a second escape or breach of prison, he or she shall be adjudged guilty of felony without benefit of clergy."

56 Geo. 3, c. 62.

Sect. 44. "That if any person shall rescue any convict who shall be ordered to be confined within the said penitentiary, either during the time of his or her conveyance to the said penitentiary, or whilst such convict shall be in the custody of the person or persons under whose care and charge he or she shall be so confined; or if any person shall be aiding or assisting in any such rescue, every such person so rescuing, aiding, or assisting, shall be guilty of felony, and may be ordered to be confined in the said penitentiary for any term not less than one year, nor exceeding five years; and if any person having the custody of any such convict as aforesaid, or being employed by the person having such custody, as a keeper, under-keeper, turnkey, assistant, or guard, shall voluntarily permit such convict to escape; or if any person whatsoever shall, by supplying arms, tools, or instruments of disguise, or otherwise, be in any manner aiding and assisting to any such convict in any escape, or in any attempt to make an escape, though no escape be actually made, or shall attempt to rescue any such convict, or be aiding and assisting in any such attempt, though no rescue be actually made, every such person so permitting, attempting, aiding, or assisting, shall be guilty of felony; and if any person having such custody, or being so employed by the person having such custody, as aforesaid, shall negligently permit any such convict to escape, such person so permitting shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being lawfully convicted of the same, shall be liable to fine or imprisonment, or to both, at the discretion of the court."

Sect. 45. "That any convict escaping, breaking prison, or being rescued in manner aforesaid, may and shall be tried before the justices of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, or at the great sessions, either for the county where he or she shall be apprehended and re-taken, or for the county in which the said offence shall have been committed; and in case of any prosecution for any such escape, attempt to escape, breach of prison, or rescue, either against the convict escaping or attempting to escape, or having broken prison, or being rescued, or against any other person or persons concerned therein, or aiding, abetting, or assisting the same, a copy properly attested, of the order of commitment to such penitentiary, shall, after proof made that the person then in question before the court is the same that was delivered with such order, be sufficient evidence to the court and jury that the person then in question was so ordered to such confinement."

Mode of trial and conviction.

Evidence of order of confinement.

It will be observed, that the 24th section of the 5 Geo. IV. c. 84, ante, p. 947, enacts, that the certificate of the clerk of the court of the conviction and sentence shall be sufficient evidence on an indictment against a person found at large before the expiration of his term of transportation. In a case upon a former statute (6 Geo. I. c. 23), which required that the certificate should contain the effect and tenor of the indictment and conviction, and of the order and contract for transportation; and also, upon another statute (24 Geo. III. c. 56, s. 5), which required a certificate containing the effect and substance only, omitting the formal part of the indictment and conviction, the indictment stated, that the prisoner was convicted of grand larceny within the benefit of clergy, and the certificate was in the same form; and the judges, upon the point being reserved, held that both were insufficient. R. v. Sutcliffe, Russ. & Ry. 469, 470; Russ. C. & M. 402. So, in a case upon a statute (56 Geo. III. c. 47, s. 8) which required the certificate to contain the effect and substance only (omitting the formal part) of the indictment and conviction, and order for transportation, it was held, that an indictment which stated that the prisoner had been convicted of felony, without stating the nature of that felony, and a certificate which stated only that the prisoner had been convicted of felony, were insufficient, and the prisoner was remitted to his former sentence. R. v. Watson, Russ. & Ry. 468; 1 Russ. Crim. & Misd. 402.

Decisions upon statutes.

Indictment and certificate of former conviction.

In a case where an indictment stated the condition upon which the royal clemency was extended to have been general, whereas it appeared not to have been general, but specific, viz. that the prisoner should be transported to places specified, the variance was held to be fatal. R. v. Fitzpatrick, Russ. & Ry. 512; 1 Russ. C. & M.

Evidence of the day of prisoner's discharge.

Where the prisoner had received a pardon on condition of transporting himself beyond the seas within fourteen days from the day of his discharge, and it was incumbent on the prosecutor to prove the precise day on which the prisoner was discharged, it was holden, that the daily book of the prison, containing entries of the names of the criminals brought to the prison, and the times when they were discharged, though generally made from the information of the turnkeys or from their indorsements on the back of the warrants, was good evidence to prove the time of the prisoner's discharge. R. v. Dick, 1 Leach, 391, 392. And it was held, that though, if a convict, on his trial for returning from transportation before his time was expired, should confess the fact and acknowledge that he is the man, the court would record such confession; yet, no such confession being made, it was necessary to produce the record of conviction, and give evidence of the prisoner's identity. 1 Haw. P. C. c. 47, s. 21.

Evidence of a sign-manual.

When a convict was sentenced to transportation for seven years, and received a sign-manual promising him a pardon, "on condition of his giving a security to transport himself for that period, within fourteen days," and upon his giving such security was discharged from prison, but neglected to transport himself within the fourteen days, it was holden, that he could not be indicted for being unlawfully found at large before the term for which he had received sentence of transportation had expired, on the ground that such sign-manual, and the recognizance entered into in consequence of it, were good evidence that he was lawfully at large, although he had not substantially performed the condition on which the promise of pardon was granted. R. v. Miller, 1 Haw. P. C. c. 47, s. 22; 1 Leach, 74; 2 Bla. R. 797; 1 Russ. C. & M. 403.

Ill health, &c. when an excuse for not leaving kingdom.

It was decided in Aickle's case, 1 Leach, 396, that if the prisoner had, at the time of his discharge, a real intention to quit the kingdom within the time, but was prevented from carrying it into execution by the distress of poverty and ill health, these impediments would amount to a lawful excuse.

Being at large in Great Britain after sentence of death, commuted for transportation for life.

In R. v. Patrick Madan, 1 Leach, 223, it was said, that a prisoner convicted of a capital crime, whose sentence is respited during the king's pleasure, and who, on having received a pardon on condition of transportation for life, is afterwards found at large in Great Britain, without lawful cause, shall, on his being indicted for returning from transportation and acquitted, be referred back to his original sentence.

Second sentence of transportation.

In R. v. Bath and others, 1 Leach, 441, it was held, that sentence of transportation may be passed a second time upon a prisoner, although the time for which he before received sentence of transportation be not expired.

Provisions of the Mutiny Act as to transportation.

The annual Mutiny Act, now the 11 Geo. IV. c. 7, s. 7, enacts, that whenever a general court-martial, by which any soldier shall have been tried, shall not think the offence deserving of capital punishment, the court may, instead of awarding a corporal punishment or imprisonment, adjudge the offender, according to the degree of the offence, to be transported as a felon for life, or for a certain term of years. And it is also provided, that in all cases where a capital punishment shall have been awarded by a general court-martial, his majesty, instead of causing such sentence to be carried into execution, may order the offender to be transported as a felon, either for life or for a certain term of years. And if any person so transported as a felon, whether in pursuance of the original sentence or in pursuance of such order from his majesty, shall afterwards return, or be found at large, without leave from his majesty, or other lawful authority, within any part of his majesty's dominions, abroad or at home (other than the place to which he shall have been transported), before the expiration of the term limited by such sentence or order, and shall be duly convicted thereof, he shall suffer death as a felon.—And sect. 18 of the same act provides, that the sentence must be notified to a judge; and that a certificate, &c. shall be evidence.

Similar enactments will be found in acts relating to the royal marine forces whilst on shore. See 11 Geo. IV. c. 8, s. 17, 19.

30 Geo. 3, c. 47.

By the 30 Geo. III. c. 47, s. 1, intituled "An Act for enabling his Majesty to authorize his Governor or Lieutenant-Governor of such places beyond the Seas, to which Felons or other Offenders may be transported, to remit the Sentence of such Offenders," it is enacted, "that it shall be lawful for his majesty, his heirs, and successors, at all times, by his or their commission under the great seal of Great Britain, to authorize and empower the governor, or the lieutenant-governor for the time being, of such place or places aforesaid, or of any of them, by an instrument in writing, under the seal of the government in which the place or places as aforesaid are or shall be situated, to remit, either absolutely or conditionally, the whole or any part of the time or term for which any such felons, or other offenders aforesaid, shall have been or shall hereafter be respectively conveyed and transported to such place or places as aforesaid; and that such instrument or instruments shall have the like force and effect, to all intents and purposes, as if his majesty, his heirs, and successors, had in such cases respectively signified his or their royal intention of mercy under his or their sign manual."

And by sect. 2, "that such governor or lieutenant-governor as aforesaid shall, by the first opportunity, transmit to one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, a duplicate, under the seal of the government, of each and every instrument as aforesaid by which the time or term of transportation of any such felons, or other offenders as aforesaid, hath been remitted or shortened; and that the names of such felons, and other offenders respectively, which shall be contained in such duplicates as aforesaid, shall be inserted in the next general pardon which shall pass under the great seal of Great Britain, after the receipt of such duplicate or duplicates by one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state."

Where an offender returns by permission of the governor of New South Wales, according to the provisions of the 30 Geo. III. c. 47, he is only to have the same advantage as if his majesty had signified his intention of mercy under his sign manual, and is to have his name inserted in the next general pardon under the great seal; a return, therefore, under such circumstances, is not sufficient to restore him to all his rights and capacities, until such pardon is signified under the great seal. Bullock v. Dodds, 2 B. & A. 258.

Traverse.

[60 Geo. 3. c. IV.]

Traverse, whence. TRAVERSE took its name from the French de traverse, which is no other than de transverso, in Latin, signifying on the other side; because, as the indictment on the one side chargeth the party, so he, on the other side, cometh in to discharge himself. Lamb. 540.

The word traverse is only applied to an issue taken upon an indictment for a misdemeanor; and it should rather seem applicable to the fact of putting off the trial till a following sessions or assizes, than to the joining of issue; and therefore, perhaps, the derivation is from the meaning of the words transversus, which, in barbarous Latin, is to go over, i. e. to go from one sessions, &c. to another, and thus it is that the officer of the court asks the party whether he be ready to try then, or will traverse over to the next sessions, &c.; but the issue is joined immediately, by pleading not guilty.

Traverse, what.

To traverse an indictment, then, is to take issue upon the chief matter thereof; which is the same as if one shall say, to make contradiction, or to deny the point of the indictment.

As in a presentment against a person for a highway overflowed with water, for default of scouring a ditch, which he and they, whose estate he hath in certain lands there, have used to scour and cleanse, such person may traverse either the matter,—to wit, that there is no highway there, or that the ditch is sufficiently scoured; or otherwise he may traverse the cause,—to wit, that he hath not that land, or that he and they whose estate he hath have not used to scour the ditch. Lamb. 541.

Right of traverse restrained in misdemeanors.

By the 60 Geo. III. and 1 Geo. IV. c. 4, “to prevent delay in the administration of justice in cases of misdemeanor,” after reciting that, “whereas great delays have occurred in the administration of justice, in cases of persons prosecuted for misdemeanors by indictment or information in his majesty’s courts of King’s Bench at Westminster and Dublin, and by indictment at the sessions of the peace, sessions of oyer and terminer, great sessions and sessions of gaol delivery, in that part of Great Britain called England, and in Ireland, respectively, by reason that the defendants, in some of the said cases, have, according to the present practice of such respective courts, an opportunity of postponing their trials to a distant period, by means of imparlances in the said several courts of King’s Bench, and by time being given to try in such respective courts of session, for remedy thereof, it is enacted, “that from and after the passing of this act, where any person shall be prosecuted in his majesty’s court of King’s Bench at Westminster, or in his majesty’s court of King’s Bench in Dublin, respectively, for any misdemeanor, either by information or by indictment there found or removed into the same respective courts, and shall appear in term-time in either of the said courts respectively in person, to answer to such indictment or information, such defendant, upon being charged therewith, shall not be permitted to imparle to a following term, but shall be required to plead or demur thereto within four days from the time of his or her appearance; and in default of his or her pleading or demurring within four days as aforesaid, judgment may be entered against the defendant for want of a plea; and in case such defendant shall appear to such indictment or information by his or her clerk or attorney in court, it shall not be lawful for such defendant to imparle to a following term, but a rule, requiring such defendant to plead, may forthwith be given, and a plea or demurrer to such indictment or information enforced, and judgment by default entered thereupon, in the same manner as might have been done, before the passing of this act, in cases where the defendant had appeared to such indictment or information by his or her clerk in court, or attorney, in a previous term.”

Persons prosecuted in K. B. for misdemeanors, appearing in court, not permitted to imparle.

Judgment may be entered for want of plea.

Court may allow further time to plead.

Sec. 2. “Provided that it shall be lawful for the said respective courts, for any judge of the same respectively, upon sufficient cause shown for the purpose, to allow further time for such defendant to plead or demur to such indictment or information." 88 Geo. 3, c. 4.

Sect. 3. "That, from and after the passing of this act, where any person shall be prosecuted for any misdemeanor by indictment at any session of the peace, session of oyer and terminer, great session, or session of gaol delivery, within that part of Great Britain called England, or in Ireland, having been committed to custody, or held to bail, to appear to answer for such offence twenty days at the least before the session at which such indictment shall be found, he or she shall plead to such indictment, and trial shall proceed thereupon at such same session of the peace, session of oyer and terminer, great session, or session of gaol delivery, respectively, unless a writ of certiorari for removing such indictment into his majesty's courts of King's Bench at Westminster or in Dublin, respectively, shall be delivered at such session before the jury shall be sworn for such trial."

Persons in custody or held to bail within 20 days before sessions, to plead, unless a writ of certiorari delivered before jury sworn.

Sect. 4. "That such writ of certiorari may be applied for and issued before such indictment has been found, in the like cases, in the same manner, and upon the same terms and conditions, as if such writ of certiorari had been applied for after such indictment had been found."

Certiorari may be issued before indictment found.

Sect. 5. "That from and after the passing of this act, where any person shall be prosecuted for any misdemeanor by indictment at any session of the peace, session of oyer and terminer, great session, or session of gaol delivery, within that part of Great Britain called England, or in Ireland, not having been committed to custody, or held to bail, to appear to answer for such offence twenty days before the session at which such indictment shall be found, but who shall have been committed to custody, or held to bail, to appear to answer for such offence at some subsequent session, or shall have received notice of such indictment having been found twenty days before such subsequent session, he or she shall plead to such indictment at such subsequent session, and trial shall proceed thereupon at such same session of the peace, session of oyer and terminer, great session, or session of gaol delivery, respectively, unless a writ of certiorari for removing such indictment into his majesty's courts of King's Bench at Westminster or in Dublin, respectively, shall be delivered at such last-mentioned session, before the jury shall be sworn for such trial, any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding."

In what cases indictments may be tried at subsequent sessions.

Unless certiorari delivered as herein mentioned.

Sect. 6. "Provided that nothing in this act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to prevent any indictment, found by a grand jury of any city or town corporate, from being removed, at the prayer of any defendant, for trial by a jury of the county next adjoining to the county of such city or town corporate, pursuant to the provisions of an act passed in the thirty-eighth year of his present majesty's reign, intituled, 'An Act to regulate the Trial of Causes, Indictments, and other Proceedings, which arise within the Counties of certain Cities and Towns Corporate within this Kingdom'; and upon such removal, the defendant shall plead, and the trial shall be had according to the provisions of this act, in like manner as if such indictment had been originally found by a grand jury of such next adjoining county."

Proviso for removing indictments found by grand jury to an adjoining county to be tried. 88 Geo. 3, c. 52.

Sect. 7. "Provided that it shall be lawful for the court, at any session of the peace, session of oyer and terminer, great session, or session of gaol delivery, respectively, upon sufficient cause shown for that purpose, to allow further time for pleading to any such indictment, or for trial of the same."

Court may allow further time for pleading, &c.

Sect. 8. "That in all cases of prosecution for misdemeanors, instituted by his majesty's attorney or solicitor-general, in any of the courts aforesaid, the court shall, if required, make order that a copy of the information or indictment shall be delivered, after appearance, to the party prosecuted, or his clerk in court, or attorney, upon application made for the same, free from all expense to the party so applying; provided that such party, or his clerk in court, or attorney, shall not have previously received a copy thereof."

In prosecutions by attorney-general, &c., copy of information, &c., delivered gratis.

Sect. 9. "Provided that in case any prosecution for a misdemeanor instituted by his majesty's attorney or solicitor-general in any of the courts aforesaid, shall not be brought to trial within twelve calendar months next after the plea of not guilty shall have been pleaded therein, it shall be lawful for the court in which such prosecution shall be depending, upon application to be made on the behalf of any defendant in such prosecution, of which application twenty days' previous notice shall have been given to his majesty's attorney or solicitor-general, to make an order, if the said court shall see just cause so to do, authorizing such defendant to bring on the trial in such prosecution; and it shall thereupon be lawful for such defendant to bring on such trial accordingly, unless a nolle prosequi shall have been entered in such prosecution."

SecT. 10. "That nothing in this act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to any prosecution by information, in nature of a quo warranto, or for the non-repair of any bridge or highway."

It is observed by Mr. Talfourd, in his valuable edition of Dickenson's Sessions, p. 333; that, under this statute, all persons who have been in custody, or are out on bail, upon the same charge, for more than twenty days, are, on the finding of the indictment, bound to plead and try instantly, like parties charged with felony. And, where an indictment has been found at a former sessions, and the party has been afterwards taken, or bailed, or received notice of the indictment twenty days before the subsequent session, he is bound at such session to plead and try, unless a writ of certiorari first remove the proceedings. This act, however, does not apply to prosecutions for omitting to repair bridges or highways, which are subject to traverse, as before the statute.

Mr. Talfourd continues, that, "with this exception, the right to traverse an indictment just found at the sessions is now confined to parties who have not been in custody, or out on bail twenty days, in respect of the charge; and the right to traverse an indictment previously found is confined to such as have not received twenty days' notice of the indictment pending against them. In these instances, the right remains; and it may be proper here to observe, that this right exists, although the party may have been twenty days in custody on a charge arising out of the same transaction, if the degree of the accusation is altered; as, if he were committed for felony, and the bill be found for misdemeanor. This point arose in the case of the King v. Edward Gibbes Wakefield, at the Lancaster spring assizes, 1827. The defendant had been committed more than twenty days before the assizes for a felony; but, at the assizes, it was thought right to indict him jointly with others for a misdemeanor, and Mr. Justice Park, after much consideration, decided that he had a right to traverse." Talf. Dick. Sess. 334.

If a party has been held to bail, or committed for more than twenty days on a charge of felony, and the grand jury ignore the bill for the felony, and find a bill for a misdemeanor in attempting it, the party is entitled to traverse. R. v. James, 3 C. & P. 222.

Mode of traversing.

The mode of traversing is, for the defendant to come into court, and bring with him two sufficient sureties, and then to deliver them, with their previous additions, to the clerk of the peace, who reads the indictment, to which the defendant pleads "not guilty." The clerk of the peace, or clerk of assize at the circuit, then calls upon the party indicted, by name, to enter into a recognizance before the court to appear, enter, and try his traverse at the next sessions, and not depart without leave on that occasion. 4 Bla. Com. 351. Dick. Sess. 334. The principal and his bail then signify "that they are content." Dick. Sess. 335.

When the defendant is anxious to try the charge against him, he should serve the prosecutor with a notice of his intention to proceed to trial of the traverse. Such notice should be served two days before and for the sessions of the peace, and eight days before and for the assizes.

The justices at the sessions may fix as a general rule what notice they think will be sufficient. 4 Bla. Com. 351, n. 5.

The notice should be signed by the defendant himself, and not by his attorney. 1 Chit. C. L., 2 ed. 488, a.

Where the defendant is indicted before the justices of oyer and terminer the notice should specify in substance the nature of the offence charged. 6 C. C. 21.

The notice should be served personally on the prosecutor. Cro. C. C. 21.

The notice of a defendant's intention to try a traverse is not a condition precedent to its being tried, but a mere regulation of practice. Therefore, if a prosecutor appears, it cures all defects in it, and he is not allowed to appear for the purpose of objecting to the notice. R. v. Hobby, 1 C. & P., N. P. C. 660; R. & M., C. N. P. 241.

The defendant should appear in person at the bar of the court at the time appointed for the trial of the traverse: he should be prepared with an affidavit of the service of the above notice of trial.

Whilst the defendant is at the bar, the clerk of the peace reads the indictment to the jury, and then says, "to which indictment the defendant hath pleaded not guilty. Your business, gentlemen, is to inquire whether he be guilty or not guilty, and hearken to your evidence." Then the crier makes the usual proclamation; and, if the prosecutor appears, the trial proceeds. Dick. Sess. 336.

If a prosecutor do not appear according to the notice, the defendant is acquitted, the prosecutor being (by the crier) called to come and give evidence. Then the chairman addresses the jury thus: "Gentlemen, A. B. stands indicted for making an assault upon Z. Y. (or as the offence is): no one appears to prove that he is guilty, and therefore you must acquit him." And thereupon the jury, being asked (by the clerk of the peace), "whether the defendant is guilty or not guilty," say, "not guilty." Dick. Sess. 336.

If the prosecutor could not be met with, so as to serve a notice of trial on him, there must be an affidavit of the endeavours to do it, and the court should be moved on such affidavit to respite the recognizances, and put off the trial to the next session or assize.

The court, on granting such application, will make an order at the same time, that a new notice, left at the last place of the prosecutor's abode, or at the office of the clerk of the peace, with certain conditions of publication or notification, as to the said court shall seem necessary, shall be sufficient. These terms imposed by the court being complied with, the defendant must make out a venire, enter his traverse, and be prepared with affidavits of the order, and of the acts done in conformity with it, to be produced at the ensuing sessions; when, if the prosecutor again fail to appear, the jury will be sworn, and an acquittal directed. Dick. Sess. 336.

After the defendant has traversed the indictment, and entered into a recognizance to appear, enter, and try, he cannot, by rendering himself to prison in discharge of his bail, procure himself to be tried at the next assizes, under the commission of gaol delivery, in order to save the fees which otherwise he would be liable to pay, because the condition of his recognizance is not fulfilled without entering his traverse. 1 Leach, 111. But he might have been tried at the sessions of gaol delivery, if he had given ten days' notice to the prosecutor, before he pleaded, of his intention so to try. Id. 112.

Record of traverse.

Forasmuch as in the record of one traverse there is at once discovered the year of the sessions, the indictment, the process to answer, the traverse itself, the verdict and judgment thereupon, the process of execution, the yielding of the parties, and the assessment of their fines, so that it alone may serve instead of all, is judged requisite to insert the same, as follows:—

Style of the sessions.

Somerset. } Heretofore, to wit, at the sessions of the peace at Bridgewater, in the county aforesaid, on the Tuesday next before the feast of St. Martin the Apostle, in the _____ year of the reign of _____, by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, king, defender of the faith, before J. P. and K. P., Esqs., and other their associates, justices of our lord the king, assigned to keep the peace in the county aforesaid, in and to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses, and other misdemeanors, in the same county committed, by the oath of twelve jurors, it is presented, that John Long, of R. M., of _____, and T. L., of _____, with divers others natural evil doers and disturbers of the peace of our said lord the king, in a seditious manner arrayed, joined, and assembled, on the _____ day of _____, in the year of the same day, in the year aforesaid, with force and arms, to wit, with swords, staves, clubs, guns, and other arms, as well offensive as defensive, at the close of one W. Willet (called B.), unlawfully, riotously, and routously broke in, entered, and eight waggon-loads of hay, to the value of _____, then a there being, of the goods and chattels of the said W. W., then and there unjustly and unlawfully took and carried away, against the peace of our said lord the king, against the form of the statute in that case made and provided; whereupon he commanded to the sheriff that he should not omit for any liberty within his bailiwick cause them to come to answer. And, afterwards, to wit, on the Tuesday next before the feast of St. Matthew the Apostle, in the year aforesaid, before aforesaid justices, came the aforesaid J. L., R. M., and T. L., in their proper persons and, having had the hearing of the indictment aforesaid, severally say that they thereof not guilty, and of this they put themselves upon the country; and Adam Martin, who for our lord the king in this behalf prosecutes, in like manner doth the same. Therefore let there come thereupon a jury before the justices of our said lord the king assigned to keep the peace in the county aforesaid, and also to hear and determine &c., at the sessions of the peace at Wells, &c., on the Tuesday next after the Epiphany of our Lord, then next to be holden, and who are not of kin to the said J. L., R. M., and T. L., nor to any of them, to recognize upon their oath whether the said J. L., R. M., and T. L., are guilty of the crime charged in the said indictment; because well the said Adam Martin, who prosecutes for the said lord the king in this behalf as the said J. L., R. M., and T. L., have put themselves upon the said jury. The same day is given as well to the aforesaid A. M., who prosecutes, &c., as to the said J. L., R. M., and T. L., &c. To which sessions of the peace, holden at W. aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, on the aforesaid day, &c., before and their associates, justices of our said lord the king, assigned to keep the peace in the county aforesaid, and also to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses, and other misdemeanors, in the same county committed, came as well the aforesaid A. M., who prosecutes, &c., as the aforesaid J. L., R. M., and T. L., in their proper persons. And the jurors aforesaid, by the sheriff of the county aforesaid, for this impannelled and demanded, to wit, A., B., C., D., &c., likewise did come; who, to say the truth concerning the premises being tried and sworn, say, upon their oath, that the aforesaid J. L., R. M., and T. L., are guilty, and every of them is guilty of trespass, contempt, and riot, aforesaid, in the indictment aforesaid above specified, in manner and form as against them is above supposed. Therefore it is considered by the court that the aforesaid J. L., R. M., and T. L., be taken to satisfy our lord the king of their fines, by occasion of the trespass, contempt, and riot aforesaid. Which J. L., R. M., and T. L., then and there present in court, prayed that they to a fine with our said lord the king, by the occasion aforesaid, may be admitted; and therefore they put themselves severally upon the mercy of our lord the king. And the fine of the same J. L. by the justices aforesaid is assessed at 3l. 6s. 8d.; and the fine of the same R. M. is assessed at 20s.; and the fine of the same T. Treason. (a) TREASON, according to Lord Coke, is derived from trahir, to betray; and trahison, by construction, treason, is the betraying itself. 3 Inst. 4.

Meaning of the word treason.

Treason, generally speaking, is intended, not of petit treason, but of high treason only. 1 Hale, 316.

Notwithstanding that treason and misprision of treason are not within the letter of the commission of the peace, yet, inasmuch as they are against the peace of the king and of the realm, any justice of the peace may, either upon his own knowledge, or the complaint of others, cause any person to be apprehended for any such offence. And such justice may take the examination of the person so apprehended, and the information of all those who can give any material evidence against him, and put the same in writing, and also bind over such who are able to give any such evidence, to the King's Bench or gaol delivery, and certify his proceedings to such court. 2 Haw. c. 8, s. 34; Hale's Sum. 168; 1 Hale, 372.

Power of justices of the peace therein.

And having committed the offender (for he is by no means bailable by justices of the peace, 3 Edw. I. c. 15; 2 Haw. c. 15, s. 44), it may be advisable for him to send an account immediately of all the particulars to a secretary of state.

Bail. 3 Edw. I. c. 15.

By the 25 Edw. III. st. 5, c. 2, which Lord Hale calls a sacred act, and Lord Coke an excellent act, and the king who made it a blessed king, and the parliament a blessed parliament, all treasons which had been uncertain before were settled. Which act, by the 1 Mary, sess. 1, c. 1, is reinforced, and again made the only standard of treason; and all statutes, between the said statutes of the 25 Edw. III. and 1 Mary, which made any offences high or petit treason, or misprision of treason, are abrogated; so that no offence is at this day to Treason by the 25 Edw. 3.

(a) The offence of treason being of so rare occurrence, it is thought fit not to enlarge thereon in this edition.

25 Edw. 3, c. 2. be esteemed high treason, unless it be either declared to be such by the said statute of the 25 Edw. III., or made such by some statute since the 1 Mary.

And therefore I shall first consider such offences as are high treason within the said statute of the 25 Edw. III., and then such as are made treason by statutes subsequent to the said statute of the 1 Mary.

The words of the statute of the 25 Edw. III., as to this matter, are as follow:

25 Edw. 3, st. 5,
c. 2.

"Whereas divers opinions have been before this time in what case treason shall be said, and in what not [that is, what shall or shall not be said to be treason]; the king, at the request of the lords and commons, hath made a declaration in the manner as hereafter followeth: that is to say, when a man doth compass or imagine the death of our lord the king, or of our lady his queen, or of their eldest son and heir; or if a man do violate the king's companion [that is, his wife, 3 Inst. 9], or the king's eldest daughter unmarried, or the wife of the king's eldest son and heir; or if a man do levy war against our lord the king in his realm, or be adherent to the king's enemies in his realm, giving to them aid and comfort in the realm, or elsewhere; and thereof be probably [proveablement, proveably] attainted of open deed, by the people of their condition. And if a man counterfeit the king's great or privy seal, or his money; and if a man bring false money into the realm, counterfeit to the money of England, knowing the money to be false; and if a man slay the chancellor, treasurer, or the king's justices of the one bench or the other, justices in eyre, or justices of assize, and all other justices assigned to hear and determine, being in their places, doing their offices. And it is to be understood, that in the cases above rehearsed, that ought to be judged treason which extends to our lord the king, and his royal majesty."

c. 1.

And by the statute of the 1 Mary, sess. 1, c. 1, which Lord Hale (1 Hale, 303) calls another excellent law, "No act, deed, or offence, being by act of Parliament made treason, by words, writing, ciphering, deeds, or otherwise whatsoever, shall be adjudged to be treason, but only such as be declared by the said statute of the 25 Edw. III." And this (he says) at one blow laid fast all the numerous treasons at any time enacted since the 25 Edw. III.

Words.

Of Open Deed—Lord Coke (3 Inst. 14, 140) seems to be of opinion, upon the said act of the 25 Edw. III., that bare words are not a sufficient overt act, or open deed, whereby to convict a person of treason; but that they are imprisonment of treason only. So, also, Lord Hale (1 Hale, 111, 118, and elsewhere throughout) seemeth to think that words, unless put into writing, are not regularly an overt act. But Mr. Hawkins (1 Haw. c. 17, s. 39) argues the contrary, and amongst other reasons for his opinion, he observes, that to charge a man with speaking treason, is unquestionably actionable, which could not be, if words could amount to treason: also, that as, in case of felony, he who by command or persuasion induceth another to commit felony, is an accessory to a felony, so he who does the same in treason is a principal traitor (there being no accessories in treason, but all being principals); and yet such person does not act but by words. Nevertheless, at this day, it seems clearly to be agreed that by the common law and the statute of Edw. III., words spoken amount only to a high misdemeanor, and no treason. 4 Bla. Com. 80.

The offences which have by different statutes been made treason since the 1 Mary, are as follows:—

The Pretender's claims were provided against by the 13 Wil. III. c. 1. 6 Anne, c. 7; and 17 Geo. II. c. 39; but these are now of course obsolete.

Offences in relation to the coin are made treason by many statutes; which are treated of in title Coins, Vol. I.

Also, there are many offences made treason with regard to the papal usurped jurisdiction; which are treated of under title Popery, ante.

Accessories in high treason.

In high treason, as hath been said before, there are no accessories, but all are principals; and, therefore, whatsoever act or consent will make a man accessory to a felony before the act done, the same will make him a principal: case of high treason. 3 Inst. 9, 21.

Prosecution to be in three years.

By the 7 Wil. III. c. 3, no person shall be prosecuted for high treason within three years after the offence committed; except in the case of design to assassinate the king's person.

And by the 31 Car. II. c. 2, persons committed for high treason shall be indicted the next term, or next assize; otherwise they shall be let to bail, unless it appear to the court, upon oath, that the witnesses for the king could not be produced in that time; and, in such case, they shall be indicted the second term or assize, or else discharged.

By the 7 Wil. III. c. 3. s. 1, persons indicted for high treason, whereby corruption of blood shall be made, or for misprision of such treason (except for counterfeiting the coin, the great seal, privy seal, privy signet, or sign manual), shall have a copy of the indictment (but not the names of the witnesses) delivered to them five days before the trial.

Sect. 7. And they shall have copies of the panel of the jurors delivered to them, two days before trial.

And shall have process of court to compel their witnesses to appear.

And moreover, the 7 Anne, c. 21, s. 11, enacts, that after the death of the person pretending to be king of England by the name of James the Third, when a person is indicted for high treason or misprision of treason, both a copy of the indictment and lists of the jurors, and also of the witnesses, shall be delivered to the party indicted, ten days before the trial.

But the 6 Geo. III. c. 53, s. 3, prevents this from extending to any indictment of high treason for counterfeiting the coin, the great seal, privy signet, or the sign manual.

And the 7 Wil. III. c. 3, enacts, that such person shall have two such counsel as they shall desire assigned them by the court, who shall have access to them at reasonable times.

Likewise, by the 20 Geo. II. c. 30, persons impeached by the House of Commons of high treason, whereby corruption of blood shall be made, or for misprision thereof, shall be admitted to make their full defence by two counsel, who shall be assigned for that purpose, in like manner as upon indictments and other prosecution.

The 7 Wil. III. c. 3, s. 1, allows them to make their defence by witnesses on oath.

And, by sect. 2, they shall not be attainted but on the oath of two witnesses, either both of them to the same overt act, or one of them to one and the other of them to another overt act of the same treason: unless they shall confess or stand mute, or refuse to plead, or challenge peremptorily above thirty-five of the jury.

By the 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 93, after reciting, "whereas it is expedient that in cases of high treason in compassing or imagining the death of the king, and of misprision of such treason, where the overt act or overt acts of such treason alleged in the indictment for such offence shall be the assassination or killing of the king, or any direct attempt against his life, or any attempt against his person, whereby his life may be endangered, or his person may suffer bodily harm, the trial for such offence should not be different from trials for murder, or wilful and malicious shooting;" it is enacted, "that in all cases of high treason in compassing or imagining the death of the king, and of misprision of such treason, where the overt act or overt acts of such treason which shall be alleged in the indictment for such offence shall be assassination or killing of the king, or any direct attempt against his life, or any direct attempt against his person whereby his life may be endangered, or his person may suffer bodily harm, the person or persons charged with such offence shall and may be indicted, arraigned, tried, and attainted, in the same manner, and according to the same course and order of trial, in every respect, and upon the like evidence, as if such person or persons stood charged with murder; and none of the provisions contained in the several acts of the seventh year of King William the Third, and the seventh year of Queen Anne respectively, touching trials in cases of treason and misprision of treason respectively, shall extend to any indictment for high treason in compassing and imagining the death of the king, or for misprision of such treason, where the overt act or overt acts of such treason alleged in the indictment shall be such as aforesaid; but upon conviction on such indictment, judgment shall be nevertheless given, and 54 Geo. 2, c. 146. execution done, as in other cases of high treason; any law, statute, or usage, to the contrary notwithstanding."

Form of sentence in case of high treason.

By the 54 Geo. III. c. 146, intituled, "An Act to alter the Punishment in certain Cases of High Treason," after reciting, that, "whereas in certain cases of high treason, as the law now stands, the sentence or judgment required by law to be pronounced or awarded against persons convicted or adjudged guilty of the said crime, in such cases, is, that they should be drawn on a hurdle to the place of execution, and there be hanged by the neck, but not until they are dead, but that they should be taken down again, and that when they are yet alive their bowels shall be taken out and burnt before their faces, and that afterwards their heads should be severed from their bodies, and their bodies be divided into four quarters, and their heads and quarters to be at the king's disposal; and whereas it is expedient in the said cases of high treason to alter the sentence or judgment now required by law:" it is enacted, "that in all cases of high treason, in which, as the law now stands, the sentence or judgment ordained by law is as aforesaid, the sentence or judgment to be pronounced or awarded, from and after the passing of this act, against any person convicted or adjudged guilty, shall be, that such person shall be drawn on a hurdle to the place of execution, and be there hanged by the neck until such person be dead; and that afterwards the head shall be severed from the body of such person, and the body, divided into four quarters, shall be disposed of as his majesty and his successors shall think fit."

alter sentence.

SECT. 2. "That in case his majesty or his successors shall so think fit, his majesty or his successors, after such sentence or judgment shall be pronounced or awarded, may by warrant under his or their sign manual, countersigned by one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, declare it to be his or their will and pleasure, and may direct and order that such person as aforesaid shall not be drawn, but shall be taken in such manner as in the said warrant shall be expressed, to the place of execution, and that such person shall not be there hanged by the neck, but that instead thereof the head shall be there severed from the body of such person whilst alive, and in such warrant may direct and order how and in what manner the body, head, and quarters of such person shall be disposed of; and it shall be lawful for the sheriff or other person or persons to whom such warrant shall be addressed, and whom it shall concern, to carry the same into execution accordingly."

The ancient judgment of a woman for high treason was to be drawn and burned. 3 Inst. 211.

30 Geo. 2, c. 48.
Forfeiture.

But, by the 30 Geo. III. c. 48, s. 1, women are not to be burned, but hanged. In the said judgment is implied forfeiture of lands and goods to the loss of dower, and corruption of blood. 3 Inst. 211. See Attainder, Vol. I.

Persons who shall compass, devise,
&c., the death,
restraint, &c., of his majesty or his heirs, or to depose them, or to levy war to compel a change of measures, &c., to be deemed traitors.

By the 36 Geo. III. c. 7, s. 1, it is enacted, "that if any person or persons whatsoever, after the day of the passing of this act, during the natural life of our most gracious sovereign lord the king (whom Almighty God preserve and bless with a long and prosperous reign), and until the end of the next session of Parliament after the demise of the crown, shall, within the realm or without, compass, imagine, invent, devise, or intend death or destruction, or any bodily harm tending to death or destruction, maim or wounding, imprisonment or restraint of the person of the same our sovereign lord the king, his heirs and successors, or to deprive or depose him or them from the style, honour, or kingly name, the imperial crown of this realm, or of any other of his majesty's dominions or countries; or to levy war against his majesty, his heirs and successors, within this realm, in order, by force or constraint, to compel him or them to change his or their measures or counsels, or in order to put any force or constraint upon him or to intimidate or overawe both houses, or either house of Parliament, or to stir any foreigner or stranger with force to invade this realm, or any other of his majesty's dominions or countries, under the obedience of his majesty, his heirs and successors; and such compassings, imaginations, inventions, devices, intentions, or any of them, shall express, utter, or declare, by publishing or printing or writing, or by any overt act or deed, being legally convicted thereof upon the oaths of two lawful and credible witnesses, upon trial, or otherwise convicted or attainted by due course of law, then every such person and persons, so as aforesaid offending, shall be deemed, declared, and adjudged to be a traitor and traitors, and shall suffer pains of death, and also lose and forfeit as in cases of high treason."

By the 57 Geo. III. c. 7, s. 1, after reciting, that "whereas by an act passed in the thirty-sixth year of his present majesty's reign, intituled, 'An Act for the Safety and Preservation of his Majesty's Person and Government against Treasonable and Seditious Practices and Attempts,' it was amongst other things enacted, 'that if any person or persons whatsoever, after the day of the passing of that act, during the natural life of his majesty, and until the end of the next session of Parliament after the demise of the crown, should, within the realm or without, compass, imagine, invent, devise, or intend death or destruction, or any bodily harm tending to death or destruction, maim or wounding, imprisonment or restraint of the person of his majesty, his heirs and successors, or to deprive or depose him or them from the style, honour, or kingly name of the imperial crown of this realm, or of any other of his majesty's dominions or countries, or to levy war against his majesty, his heirs and successors, within this realm, in order by force or constraint to compel him or them to change his or their measures or counsels, or in order to put any force or constraint upon or to intimidate or overawe both houses or either house of Parliament, or to move or stir any foreigner or stranger with force to invade this realm or any other his majesty's dominions or countries under the obedience of his majesty, his heirs and successors, and such compassings, imaginations, inventions, devices, or intentions, or any of them, should express, utter, or declare, by publishing any printing or writing, or by any overt act or deed, being legally convicted thereof upon the oaths of two lawful and credible witnesses upon trial, or otherwise convicted or attainted by due course of law, then every such person and persons, so as aforesaid offending, should be deemed, declared, and adjudged to be a traitor and traitors, and should suffer pains of death, and also lose and forfeit as in cases of high treason: and whereas it is necessary and expedient that such of the provisions of the said act as would expire at the end of the next session of Parliament after the demise of the crown, should be further continued and made perpetual;" it is enacted, "that all and every the hereinbefore recited provisions which relate to the heirs and successors of his majesty, the sovereigns of these realms, shall be and the same are hereby made perpetual."

36 Geo. 3, c. 7.

The said provisions made perpetual.
57 Geo. 3, c. 7.

Petit Treason.

High treason is against the king, petit treason against the subjects. 3 Inst. 20. Petit treason, what.

The judgment against a man for petit treason, is, that he shall be drawn to the place of execution, and there hanged by the neck till he be dead. 2 Haw. Judgment.
c. 49, s. 5.

The consequence of attainder is, forfeiture of lands (to the lord of the fee) and of goods; loss of dower; and corruption of blood. 2 Haw. c. 46, s. 1. Forfeiture.
See Attainder, Vol. I.

Although there can be no accessaries in high treason, yet in petit treason there may be accessaries, both before and after. 3 Inst. 21. Accessary.

By the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 2, it is enacted, "that every offence, which before the commencement of this act would have amounted to petit treason, shall be deemed to be murder only, and no greater offence; and all persons guilty in respect thereof, whether as principals or as accessaries, shall be dealt with, arrested, tried, and punished as principals and accessaries in murder." See Homicide, Vol. III. Petit treason to be treated in all respects as murder.

Misprision of Treason.

Misprision cometh of the French word mépris, which properly signifieth neglect or contempt: and misprision of treason, in legal understanding, signifieth, Misprision, what.

Judgment.

Caution.

Misprision of
petit treason.

when one knowing of any treason, though no party or consenter to it, yet conceals it, and doth not reveal it in convenient time. 3 Inst. 36; 1 Hale, 371.

The judgment of misprision of treason is, to be imprisoned during life, to forfeit all his goods for ever, and the profits of his lands during life. 3 Inst. 36.

Every man, therefore, that knoweth a treason, ought with all speed reveal it to the king, his privy council, or other magistrate. Hale's Sum. 127.

But it seemeth that misprision of petit treason is not subject to the judgment of misprision of high treason, but only is punishable by fine and imprisonment, as in the case of misprision of felony. 1 Hale, 375.

In East's P. C., Vol. I., from p. 37 to 140, will be found a very satisfactory treatise on this crime.

Treasure Found.

[4 Edw. I. st. 2.]

TREASURE trove, or treasure found, is where any money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion, is found hidden in the earth, or other private place, the owner thereof being unknown; in which case, the treasure belongs to the king (or to some other by the king's grant or prescription): but if he that hid it be known, or afterwards found out, the owner and not the king is entitled to it. 1 Bla. Com. 295.

Treasure trove, what.

Also, if it be found in the sea, or upon the earth, it doth not belong to the king, but to the finder, if no owner appears. So that it seems it is the hiding, not the abandoning of it, that gives the king a property. Id.

This difference arises from the different intentions which the law implies in the owner. A man that hides his treasure in a secret place evidently doth not mean to relinquish his property, but reserves a right of claiming it again when he sees occasion; and, if he dies, and the secret also dies with him, the law gives it to the king, in part of his royal revenue. But a man that scatters his treasure into the sea, or upon the public surface of the earth, is construed to have absolutely abandoned his property, and returned it into the common stock, without any intention of reclaiming it; and therefore it belongs, as in a state of nature, to the first occupant or finder, unless the owner appear and assert his right, which then proves that the loss was by accident, and not with an intent to renounce his property. 1 Bla. Com. 295.

Larceny cannot be committed of such things whereof no man hath any determinate property, though the things themselves are capable of property, as of treasure trove, or wreck, till seized; though he that hath them in point of franchise may have a special action against him that takes them. 1 Hale, 510.

Taking treasure trove, not felony.

The punishment for concealment of treasure trove is by fine and imprisonment. 3 Inst. 133.

But punishable.

And it belongeth to the coroner to inquire thereof. Id.

Concerning which, it is enacted by the 4 Edw. I. st. 2, that a coroner, being certified by the king's bailiffs, or other honest men of the country, shall go to the places where treasure is said to be found. And it is further enacted in the same statute, that the coroner ought to inquire of treasure that is found, who are the finders, and likewise who is suspected thereof, and that may be well perceived, where one liveth riotously, haunting taverns, and hath done so of long time; hereupon he may be attached for this suspicion by four or six, or more pledges, if they may be found. See, further, Coroner, Vol. I.

The coroner may inquire thereof.

Also, it seems to be agreed, that all seizures of treasure trove, belonging to the king, may be inquired of in the sheriff's torn. But it seems questionable, whether a prescription in a court leet, to inquire of such seizure belonging to the lord of it, being a subject, be good or not, since it is against the general rule of the law for the leet to take cognizance of trespasses done to the private damage of the lord, because that would make him his own judge. 2 Haw. c. 10, s. 57.

Trial.

[See, further, Sessions, ante.]

Time of trial.

IN felonies, it is always the practice to try the defendant at the same assizes. 1 Chit. C. L. 483, and authorities there collected.

In misdemeanors, also, since the 60 Geo. III. c. 4, this is now the usual practice, whether at the assizes or sessions, unless when the defendant traverses, as in some cases he may do. See Crabtree, ante.

In capital cases, the court will not appoint the time of trial, unless the defendant be brought to the bar, and be personally in court, when the rule is made for the purpose. 2 Stra. 826.

Notice of trial and proceedings in a traverse.

We have already, while considering the nature of a traverse, and what allowed, treated of the requisite notices of trial, and subsequent proceedings therein, at the time appointed for the trial. See Crabtree, ante.

Postponing trial.

The court has always authority, if they think fit, to put off the trial, either in felonies or misdemeanors.

The most usual ground for putting off a trial is the absence of a material witness. Bac. Ab. Trial, &c.; but this is not in general a sufficient ground, if the witness was not absent at the time notice of trial was given. Id.; Barnes, 422. Nor will the court grant the application, if the witness be in a foreign country, and not likely shortly to return. 3 Burr. 1514; 1 Bl. Rep. 51; 8 East, 37; and see, as to the form of the affidavit, 1 Chit. C. L. 493.

There may be various other proceedings for putting off the trial. See 1 Chit. C. L. 491, and authorities there collected.

In order to support an application for putting off a trial, a previous notice thereof must be given to the opposite party. Cro. C. C. 22. The application must also be supported by an affidavit, stating fully and specifically the facts upon which the application is grounded. Id.

When the application is granted, it is seldom for more than the next term, or the ensuing assizes or sessions. Bac. Ab. Trial.

Place of trial.

We have already considered the place of trial, while treating of the venue, under title Indictment, Vol. III. p. 330 to 335. As to changing the place of trial, see 1 Chit. C. L. 495.

Adjournment.

If the trial cannot be concluded in one day, the court may adjourn from day to day, until it can be completed. 6 T. R. 530; 4 Tam. 311. When this is the case, the jury shall all retire together, to some adjoining tavern, where accommodations are prepared for them, and the bailiffs are sworn "well and truly to keep the jury, and neither to speak to them themselves, nor suffer any other person to speak to them, touching any matter relative to this trial." 6 T. R. 530. And if the jury separate, and one of them converse respecting the verdict with a stranger, the verdict will be bad, and a venire de novo awarded. 4 B. & A. 273; 2 B. & A. 462; 1 Chit. 401, S. C.

Withdrawing record.

When the party who has given notice of trial is not ready to proceed to trial of an indictment or information for a misdemeanor, at the time appointed, if the notice of trial, he may withdraw the record; but then he must pay the costs.

to the other party, unless he countermand his notice of trial in time to prevent any extra expenses. 1 Sulk. 193; 1 Stru. 33; 8 East, 270.

As to the proceedings attending the arraignment of the defendant, and the incidents thereto, see Arraignment, Vol. I.

We have already fully considered the proceedings at a trial, with reference to the jury. See Jurors, Vol. III.

If any one of the jury be taken ill during the trial, so as not to be able to attend, or die, the jury must be discharged, and another jury must be summoned. 2 Leach, 620; 4 Taun. 309; 3 Camp. 207; and see 1 Chit. C. L. 629.

When the jury are assembled in the jury-box, called, and sworn, the clerk, in case of felony, calls to the prisoner at the bar, and bids him hold up his hand, by saying, "C. D., hold up thy hand," and then addresses the jury in these words:—"Look upon the prisoner, you that are sworn, and hearken to his cause.—A. B. stands indicted by the name of A. B., &c." (reading the indictment, as was done upon the arraignment, and then proceeding) "Upon this indictment he hath been arraigned; upon this arraignment he pleaded not guilty; and, for his trial, hath put himself upon God and the country, which country you are; so that your charge is to inquire whether he be guilty of the high treason (or 'felony'), whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty. If you find him guilty, you shall inquire what lands, tenements, goods, and chattels he had at the time of the high treason (or 'felony') committed, or at any time since; if you find him not guilty, then you shall inquire if he did fly for it or not; if you find he did fly for it, then you shall inquire what goods and chattels he had at the time when he did fly for it, or at any time since; if you find him not guilty, and that he did not fly for it, say so, and no more. Hear your evidence." 2 Hule, 293; Cro. C. C. 8; 1 Chit. C. L. 554.

But, on the trial of an indictment for a misdemeanor, where it is not necessary for the defendant to appear, ante, Vol. I. p. 153, the indictment is not thus formally read over in court; and, indeed, there is no necessity for such a proceeding, as he is entitled to a copy.

After these proceedings, if the cause is of more than ordinary importance, the indictment is usually opened, and the evidence arranged, examined, and enforced, by the counsel for the prosecution. 4 Bla. Com. 354. The junior counsel usually states the outline of the indictment, and pleadings thereon, but he cannot speak to more than is upon the record, for it is the province of the leading counsel to state the circumstances of the offence, 1 St. Tr. 234; and it is not usual for the leading counsel to endeavour to aggravate the case, but to confine himself to the facts which he thinks will be proved in evidence. 6 St. Tr. 829; Dick Ses. 350; 1 Chit. C. L. 555.

After the speech of the leading counsel, the witnesses are called and examined. 4 Harg. St. Tr. 705.

As to the evidence and witnesses, and the mode of examination, &c., see Evidence and witnesses, Vol. II.

When the case for the prosecution is closed, the court asks the defendant if he has anything to say in answer to the charge. Upon this, he brings forward such evidence as he may be advised. Sometimes it is not advisable to bring forward any evidence.

In felonies, the prisoner's counsel has no right to address the court or jury on the merits of the case, but he may submit to the court any point of law in the defendant's favour. But the prisoner himself may make such address, either in felonies or misdemeanors; and in misdemeanors the prisoner's counsel may make it.

In felonies, the counsel for the prosecution has never any right to reply. In Reply. misdemeanors, he has such right, if the defendant has called any witnesses for his defence, or if his counsel has, in addressing the jury, stated any fact or any document which is not already in evidence, although he afterwards declines to prove the fact or put in the writing. 11 Harg. St. Tr. 288; 1 Esp. R. 227; Peuke's N. P. 4; R. v. Bignold, Tulf. Dick. Ses. 388; 1 Chit. C. L. 627. In crown prosecutions, the attorney-general and solicitor-general have in all cases a right of replying. 11 Harg. St. Tr. 267; 20 St. Tr. 664.

On the case being finished on both sides, the judge at the assizes, or chairman at the sessions, sums up the evidence, and, laying the substantial features of the case and defence before the jury, he directs them to consider their verdict accordingly.

After this charge is concluded, if the jury cannot agree in a short time, by consulting in their box, they retire to a convenient place appointed for the purpose, and the bailiff is sworn to keep them, as follows:—"You shall swear that you shall keep this jury without meat, drink, fire, or candle; you shall suffer none to speak to them, neither shall you speak to them yourself, but only to ask them, whether they are agreed: so help you God." Co. Lit. 227; Dalt. c. 185.

During this absence, the jury are not to eat or drink without the permission of the justices, or to speak with any one, except the bailiff, and merely to inform him whether they are agreed. Id.; Tulj. Dick. Sess. 389; 2 Hale, 296; 1 Chit. C. L. 632.

Until the jury are agreed, none of them must separate, or leave the place appointed for their deliberations, without the special permission of the court, Co. Lit. 227; but the judges may adjourn while the jury are withdrawn to confer, and return to receive the verdict. 3 Harg. St. Tr. 731; 4 Bl. Com. 360.

The verdict.

The verdict must, in all cases, except inferior misdemeanors, be delivered in the presence of the defendant, in open court, and publicly. Co. Lit. 227, s.; 2 Haw. c. 47, s. 2; Sir T. Raym. 193; 5 Burr. 2667.

There is no necessity that the jury should find the defendant guilty of all the charges laid against him: they may acquit him of a part, and find him guilty of the residue. See 2 Haw. c. 26; 1 Chit. C. L. 637; and see instances, Burglary, Vol. I.; Larceny, Vol. III.

An exception to this rule exists, where the prisoner, by being originally indicted for a different offence, would be deprived of any advantage which he would otherwise be entitled to claim; in which case the prosecutor is not permitted to oppress the defendant, by altering the mode of the proceedings. A defendant, therefore, cannot be found guilty of a misdemeanor on an indictment for felony, because he would by that means lose the benefit of having a copy of the indictment, a special jury, and of making his full defence by counsel. 1 Chit. C. L. 639; 2 Stra. 1137; 2 Haw. c. 47.

The jury may, in all cases, find a special verdict, by which the facts of the case are put on the record, and the law is submitted to the judges. 2 Haw. c. 47; 1 Chit. C. L. 642 to 647.

Vagrants.

[45 Geo. III. c. 61; 52 Geo. III. c. 31; 58 Geo. III. c. 92; 4 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 7; 5 Geo. IV. c. 13, c. 83.]

THE act now in force which consolidates, amends, and repeals the prior statutes relative to vagrants, is the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83; by which act, intituled, "An Act for the Punishment of Idle and Disorderly Persons, and Rogues and Vagabonds, in that part of Great Britain called England," after reciting the 3 Geo. IV. c. 40, and that the said act was to continue in force until the first day of September, 1824, and no longer; and that it is expedient to make further provision for the suppression of vagrancy, and for the punishment of idle and disorderly persons, rogues and vagabonds, and incorrigible rogues, in England: it is enacted, "that all provisions heretofore made relative to idle and disorderly persons, rogues, and vagabonds, incorrigible rogues or other vagrants, in England, shall be and the same are hereby repealed, except only as to any offence committed before the passing of this act, which shall be punished under the provisions of the said recited act, and save and except as hereinafter excepted."

5 Geo. 4, c. 83.

Former provisions made as to vagrants shall be repealed, except as to offences committed before the passing of this act.

Repealed.

Sect. 2. "And whereas by an act passed in the thirty-second year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, intituled, 'An Act to explain and amend an Act made in the seventeenth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, intituled, "An Act to amend and make more effectual the Laws relating to Rogues, Vagabonds, and other disorderly Persons, and to Houses of Correction," his majesty's judges of assize and the justices at the general or quarter-sessions, or any justice of the peace, are empowered to order any convict upon his discharge from prison to be conveyed by pass in manner therein directed; and the judge, justices, or justice aforesaid, are also empowered to convey by pass any person who shall be acquitted at the assizes or general or quarter sessions, or discharged by proclamation or otherwise, who shall apply to be conveyed as aforesaid: and whereas doubts have arisen whether such parts of such act as give such power to order such person to be conveyed by pass were by the provisions of the said recited act of the third year of the reign of his present majesty repealed: and whereas it is expedient to remove such doubts; be it therefore declared and enacted, "that all such provisions of the said recited act of the thirty-second year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, as give such power of conveying by pass any convict upon his discharge from prison, and any person who shall be acquitted at the assizes or general or quarter sessions, or discharged by proclamation or otherwise, shall be and the same is hereby repealed."

Sect. 22. "Provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend or apply to Scotland or Ireland, nor to alter any law now in force for the removal of poor persons born in Scotland, Ireland, or the Isles of Man [Jersey and Guernsey (a)], and becoming chargeable to parishes in England, such persons not having committed acts of vagrancy as hereinbefore described, nor to alter any law now in force relating to lunatic vagrants."

I. Idle and Disorderly Persons.

Persons committing certain offences to be deemed idle and disorderly persons.

The 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3, enacts,—1, “that every person being wholly or in part to maintain himself or herself, or his or her family, by want or by other means, and wilfully refusing or neglecting so to do, by which refusal or neglect he or she, or any of his or her family whom he or she may be legally bound to maintain, shall have become chargeable to any parish, township, or place;”

2. “Every person returning to and becoming chargeable in any parish, township, or place, from whence he or she shall have been legally removed by order of two justices of the peace, unless he or she shall produce a certificate of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of some other parish, township, or place, thereby acknowledging him or her to be settled in such other parish, township, or place;” (See Poor, Vol. IV. Mann v. Dav- 3 B. & A. 103.)

3. “Every petty chapman or pedlar wandering abroad and trading, without being duly licensed, or otherwise authorized by law;”

4. “Every common prostitute wandering in the public streets or public highways, or in any place of public resort, and behaving in a riotous or indecent manner;”

5. “And every person wandering abroad, or placing himself or herself in any public place, street, highway, court, or passage, to beg or gather alms, or causing, or procuring, or encouraging any child or children so to do;”

6. [And every person asking alms under a certificate or other instrument prohibited by the act; s. 16]

How punished.

“Shall be deemed an idle and disorderly person within the true intent and meaning of this act; and it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to commit such offender (being thereof convicted before him by his own verdict or by the confession of such offender, or by the evidence on oath of one more credible witness or witnesses) to the house of correction, there to be set to hard labour for any time not exceeding one calendar month.”

And by the 4 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 7, all idle and disorderly persons, rogues and vagabonds, incorrigible rogues, and other vagrants, are to be committed to houses of correction, and not to the common gaols. See Gasls, 4 Geo. 4, c. 64.

Vol. II.
The commitment must be for a precise definite time, to be specified in the warrant of commitment. Baldwin and others v. Blackmore, Esq., 1 Burr. 596, S. P.; R. v. J. Hall, 3 Burr. 1636. If for deserting a family, the warrant must state that they were chargeable. 3 Burr. 1636. It must also state that the defendant had been convicted of the offence, and not merely that he had been charged. R. v. Rhodes, 4 T. R. 220; R. v. Hooper, 6 T. R. 225. It must also show the authority of the convicting justice. R. v. York, 5 Burr. 2684.

Form of commitment.

II. Rogues and Vagabonds.

By the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 4, it is enacted, "that every person committing any of the offences hereinbefore mentioned, after having been convicted as an idle and disorderly person;"

2. "Every person pretending or professing to tell fortunes, or using any subtle craft, means, or device, by palmistry or otherwise, to deceive and impose on any of his majesty's subjects;"

3. "Every person wandering abroad and lodging in any barn or outhouse, or in any deserted or unoccupied building, or in the open air, or under a tent, or in any cart or waggon, not having any visible means of subsistence, and not giving a good account of himself or herself;"

4. "Every person wilfully exposing to view, in any street, road, highway, or public place, any obscene print, picture, or other indecent exhibition;"

5. "Every person wilfully, openly, lewdly, and obscenely exposing his person in any street, road, or public highway, or in the view thereof, or in any place of public resort, with intent to insult any female;"

6. "Every person wandering abroad, and endeavouring, by the exposure of wounds or deformities, to obtain or gather alms;"

7. "Every person going about as a gatherer or collector of alms, or endeavouring to procure charitable contributions of any nature or kind, under any false or fraudulent pretence;"

8. "Every person running away and leaving his wife, or his or her child or children, chargeable, or whereby she or they, or any of them, shall become chargeable to any parish, township, or place;"

9. "Every person playing or betting in any street, road, highway, or other open and public place, at or with any table or instrument of gaming, at any game, or pretended game of chance;" (a)

10. "Every person having in his or her custody or possession any picklock, key, crow, jack, bit, or other implement, with intent feloniously to break into any dwelling-house, warehouse, coach-house, stable, or outbuilding, or being armed with any gun, pistol, hanger, cutlass, bludgeon, or other offensive weapon, or having upon him or her any instrument with intent to commit any felonious act;" (b)

11. "Every person being found in or upon any dwelling-house, warehouse, coach-house, stable, or outhouse, or in any inclosed yard, garden, or area, for any unlawful purpose;" (b)

12. "Every suspected person or reputed thief, frequenting any river, canal, or navigable stream, dock, or basin, or any quay, wharf, or warehouse near or adjoining thereto, or any street, highway, or avenue leading thereto, or any place of public resort, or any avenue leading thereto, or any street, highway, or place adjacent, with intent to commit felony;"

Persons committing certain offences to be deemed rogues and vagabonds.

(a) See Gaming, Vol. II. In R. v. Clarke, 1 Cowp. 35, it was held, that playing bowls was not within the 17 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 2.

(b) And see 4 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 7, ante, p. 972.

INCORRIGIBLE
ROGUES.

How punished.

Form of conviction.

13. "And every person apprehended as an idle and disorderly person, and violently resisting any constable or other peace-officer so apprehending him or her, and being subsequently convicted of the offence for which he or she shall have been so apprehended;" (a)

"Shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond, within the true intent and meaning of this act; and it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to commit such offender (being thereof convicted before him by the confession of such offender, or by the evidence on oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses) to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding three calendar months; and every such picklock key, crow, jack, bit, and other implement, and every such gun, pistol, dagger, cutlass, bludgeon, or other offensive weapon, and every such instrument as aforesaid, shall, by the conviction of the offender, become forfeited to the king's majesty."

The conviction as a rogue and vagabond under the above 10th division of the head of vagrancy, must state that the implements, or some of them, were found on the prisoner at the time of his apprehension. R. v. Brown, 6 T. R. 26. Brown was committed upon the now repealed act, 23 Geo. III. c. 83, for having upon him many picklock keys, two crows, and other implements with an intent feloniously to break and enter into a dwelling-house at Waver. Objection was taken to the commitment, that it did not state that he had these implements upon him when he was apprehended. Lord Kenyon, C. J., said, "I yield with great reluctance to the objection, but I am afraid it is well founded;" and the prisoner was discharged.

III. Incorrigible Rogues.

Who shall be deemed incorrigible rogues.

By the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 5, it is enacted—1. "That every person breaking or escaping out of any place of legal confinement before the expiration of the term for which he or she shall have been committed or ordered to be confined by virtue of this act;"

2. "Every person committing any offence against this act which shall subject him or her to be dealt with as a rogue and vagabond, such person having been at some former time adjudged so to be, and duly convicted thereof;"

3. "And every person apprehended as a rogue and vagabond, and violently resisting any constable or other peace-officer so apprehending him or her, and being subsequently convicted of the offence for which he or she shall have been so apprehended;"

How punished.

"Shall be deemed an incorrigible rogue within the true intent and meaning of this act; and it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to commit such offender (being thereof convicted before him, by the confession of such offender, or by the evidence on oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses) to the house of correction, there to remain until the next general or quarterly sessions of the peace; and every such offender who shall be so committed to the house of correction shall be there kept to hard labour during the period of his or her imprisonment."

Power of sessions to detain and keep to hard labour, and punish, by whipping, incorrigible rogues.

By sect. 10, "When any incorrigible rogue shall have been committed to the house of correction, there to remain until the next general or quarterly sessions, it shall be lawful for the justices of the peace there assembled to examine into the circumstances of the case, and to order, if they think fit, that such offender be further imprisoned in the house of correction, and be there kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding one year from the time of making such order, and to order further, if they think fit, that such offender (not being a female) be punished by whipping, at such time during his imprisonment, and at such place within their jurisdiction, as, according to the nature of the offence, they in their discretion shall deem to be expedient."

It should be observed, that justices in session have only an original jurisdiction over incorrigible rogues.

(a) See another instance in s. 15, post.

The form and manner of whipping may perhaps be best collected from the provisions of former vagrant acts. By the 22 Hen. VIII. c. 12, the vagrant was to be "carried to some market-town, or other place, and there tied to the end of a cart, naked, and beaten with whips throughout such market-town, or other place, till his body should be bloody by reason of such whipping." By the 39 Eliz. c. 4, s. 3, he was to be "stripped naked from the middle upwards, and only whipped till his body should be bloody."

APPREHENDING OFFENDERS, &c.

III. Apprehending Offenders, and Search-Warrants.

By the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 6, it is enacted, "that it shall be lawful for any person whatsoever to apprehend any person who shall be found offending against this act, and forthwith to take and convey him or her before some justice of the peace, to be dealt with in such manner as is hereinbefore directed, or to deliver him or her to any constable or other peace-officer of the place where he or she shall have been apprehended, to be so taken and conveyed as aforesaid; and in case any constable or other peace-officer shall refuse or wilfully neglect to take such offender into his custody, and to take and convey him or her before some justice of the peace, or shall not use his best endeavours to apprehend and to convey before some justice of the peace any person that he shall find offending against this act, it shall be deemed a neglect of duty in such constable or other peace-officer, and he shall on conviction be punished in such manner as is hereinafter directed."

Any person may apprehend offenders.

Constables, &c., neglecting their duty.

In a late case it was held that a man may be arrested without warrant, under the above section, as a person found in a dwelling-house, &c., with intent to commit a felony, if he is seen in the dwelling-house, but gets out of it, and is taken on fresh pursuit. And it makes no difference that he was not seen getting out of a house, if he was found concealing himself to avoid being apprehended, upon other premises near. R. v. Howarth, R. & M., C. C. 207.

To make such arrest legal, it is not necessary that the person should have, at the time he is arrested, a continuing purpose to commit the felony: he may be arrested though that purpose is wholly ended. Id.

In the same case it was held that where the circumstances are such that a man must know why a person is about to apprehend him, he need not be told, and the arrest will be legal, and the resistance illegal, as much as if he had been told. Id. See Arrest, Vol. I.

Sect. 7. "That it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace, upon oath being made before him that any person hath committed or is suspected to have committed any offence against this act, to issue his warrant to apprehend and bring before him or some other justice of the peace the person so charged, to be dealt with as is directed by this act."

Justices may issue warrant to apprehend suspected persons.

Sect. 8. "That it shall be lawful for any constable, peace-officer, or other person apprehending any person charged with being an idle and disorderly person, or a rogue and vagabond, or an incorrigible rogue, to take any horse, mule, ass, cart, car, caravan, or other vehicle, or goods in the possession or use of such person, and to take and convey the same as well as such person before some justice of the peace, and for every justice of the peace by whom any person shall be adjudged to be an idle and disorderly person, or a rogue and vagabond, or an incorrigible rogue, to order that such offender shall be searched, and that his or her trunks, boxes, bundles, parcels, or packages, shall be inspected in the presence of the said justice, and of him or her, and also that any cart, car, caravan, or other vehicle which may have been found in his or her possession or use, shall be searched in his or her presence; and it shall be lawful for the said justice to order that any money which may be then found with or upon such offender shall be paid and applied for and towards the expense of apprehending, conveying to the house of correction, and maintaining such offender during the time for which he or she shall have been committed; and if upon such search money sufficient for the purposes aforesaid be not found, it shall be lawful for such justice to order that a part, or, if necessary, the whole of such other effects then found, shall be sold, and that the produce of such sale shall be paid and applied as aforesaid, and also that the overplus of such money or effects, after deducting the charges of such sale, shall be returned to the said offender." (a)

Sect. 13. "That it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace, upon information on oath before him made, that any person hereinbefore described to be an idle and disorderly person, or a rogue and vagabond, or an incorrigible rogue, is or is reasonably suspected to be harboured or concealed in any house kept or purporting to be kept for the reception, lodging, or entertainment of travellers, by warrant under his hand and seal to authorize any constable or other person or persons to enter at any time into such house, and to apprehend and bring before him or any other justice of the peace every such idle and disorderly person, rogue and vagabond, and incorrigible rogue, as shall be found therein, to be dealt with in the manner hereinbefore directed."

A warrant under the Vagrant Act, to search all suspected houses for idle and disorderly persons, is strictly confined to persons of that description; and the officer will not be justified if he attempt to execute it in any other places than those intended by the statute. 1 Leach, 208.

V. Recognizances to Prosecute, and Expenses of Prosecution.

Justices may bind persons by recognizance to prosecute vagrants at sessions.

By the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 9, it is enacted, "That when any justice as aforesaid shall commit any such incorrigible rogue to the house of correction, there to remain till the next general or quarter sessions, or when any such idle and disorderly person, rogue and vagabond, or incorrigible rogue, shall give notice of his or her intention to appeal against the conviction of him or her, and shall enter into recognizance as hereinafter directed to prosecute such appeal, such justice shall require the person by whom such offender shall be apprehended, and the person or persons whose evidence shall appear to him to be material to prove the offence and to support such conviction, to become bound in recognizance (b) to his majesty, his heirs and successors, to appear at the said general or quarter-sessions, to give evidence against such offender touching such offence; and the justices of the peace at their said general or quarter sessions are hereby authorized and empowered, at the request of any person who shall have become bound in any such recognizance, to order the treasurer of the county, riding, division, or place in which the offence shall have been committed, to pay unto such prosecutor, and unto the witness or witnesses on his or her behalf, such sum or sums of money as to the court shall seem reasonable and sufficient to reimburse such prosecutor and such witness or witnesses respectively for the expenses he, she, or they shall have been severally put to, and for his, her, or their trouble and loss of time in and about such prosecution, which order the clerk of the peace is hereby directed and required forthwith to make out and deliver unto such prosecutor, or unto such witness or witnesses upon being paid for the same the sum of 2s. and no more; and the said treasurer is hereby authorized and required, upon sight of such order, forthwith to pay unto such prosecutor or other person or persons authorized to receive the same, such money as aforesaid, and the said treasurer shall be allowed the same in his account; and in case any such person or persons as aforesaid shall refuse to enter into such recognizance, it shall be lawful for such justice to commit such person or persons so refusing to the common gaol, there to remain until he, she, or they shall enter into such recognizance, or shall be otherwise discharged by due course of law."

Sessions may order payment of expenses to prosecutors and witnesses.

Clerk of the peace to make out and deliver order.

VI. Duties, &c. of Constables, &c.

Officers neglecting their duties, &c.
Obstructing them.

By the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 11, it is enacted, "that in case any constable or other peace-officer, shall neglect his duty in anything required of him by this act, or in case any person shall disturb or hinder any constable, or other person officer, in the execution of this act, or shall be aiding, abetting, or assisting therein, and shall be thereof convicted upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, before one or more justice or justices of the peace, where such offence shall be committed, every such offender shall, for every such offence, forfeit any sum not exceeding 5*l.*; and in case such offender shall not forthwith pay such sum so forfeited, the same shall be levied by distress and sale of the offender's goods, by warrant from such justice or justices; and if sufficient distress cannot be found, it shall be lawful to and for one or more such justice or justices to commit the person so offending to the house of correction, there to be kept for any time not exceeding three calendar months, or until such fine be paid; and the said justice or justices shall cause the said fine, when paid, to be forthwith delivered to the treasurer of the county, riding, division, or place, where such offence shall have been committed, to be by him added to and used as part of the stock of the said county, riding, division, or place."

Sect. 12. "That in case any constable, or other peace-officer, shall be convicted before any one or more justice or justices of the peace, for any neglect of any duty required of him by this act, or of any disobedience of any lawful warrant or order of any justice or justices of the peace issued under the provisions of this act, and in case any two or more justices of the peace shall impose any fine, or direct any penalty to be paid by such officer, under and by virtue of the powers given to justices of the peace by an act passed in the thirty-third year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, intitled, 'An Act to authorize Justices of the Peace to impose Fines upon Constables, Overseers, and other Peace or Parish Officers, for Neglect of Duty, and on Masters of Apprentices for Ill-usage of such their Apprentices, and also to make Provision for the Execution of Warrants of Distress granted by Magistrates,' or under any other powers enabling such justices in that behalf, then and in every such case it shall be lawful for such justice or justices, upon conviction of any such offender, to reimburse and allow to the person or persons on whose complaint or information such offender shall have been convicted all necessary costs and expenses which such person or persons may thereby have incurred, or by any appeal made in consequence thereof, by making an order under his or their hancs and seals, upon the treasurer of the county, riding, division, or place, to pay to such person or persons the amount of such costs and expenses, on producing the said order, and giving a receipt for the same, and the same shall be allowed the said treasurer in his account."

Sect. 16. "That, from and after the passing of this act, no justice of the peace, mayor, or other magistrate, shall grant to any person, other than a person entitled thereto, under and by virtue of an act passed in the forty-third year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Third, intitled, 'An Act for the Relief of Soldiers, Sailors, and Marines, and of the Wives of Soldiers in the

VIII. Form, &c. of Conviction.

Form of conviction under this act.

The 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 17, enacts, "that no proceeding to be had before any justice or justices of the peace under the provisions of this act shall be quashed for want of form; and every conviction of any offender as an idle and disorderly person, or as a rogue and vagabond, or as an incorrigible rogue, under this act, shall be in the form or to the effect following, or as near thereto as circumstances will permit (that is to say):

rogue and vagabond, or an incorrigible rogue), within the intent and meaning of the statute made in the fifth year of the reign of his late majesty King George the Fourth,

And the justice or justices of the peace before whom any such conviction shall take place, shall, and he and they is and are hereby required to transmit the said conviction to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace to be holden in and for the county, riding, division, or place wherein such conviction shall have taken place, there to be filed and kept on record; and a copy of the conviction so filed, duly certified by the clerk of the peace, shall and may be read as evidence in any court of record, or before any justice or justices of the peace acting under the powers and provisions of this act."

IX. Appeal.

Appeal to sessions.

The 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 14, enacts, "that any person aggrieved by any act or determination of any justice or justices of the peace out of sessions, and concerning the execution of this act, may appeal to the next general or quarter sessions for the county, riding, division, or place, in and for which such justice or justices shall have so acted, giving to the justice or justices of the peace whose act or determination shall be appealed against, notice in writing of such appeal, and of the ground thereof, within seven days after such act or determination, and before the next general or quarter sessions, and entering within such seven days into a recognizance, with sufficient surety, before a justice of the peace for the county or place in which such person shall have been convicted, personally to appear and prosecute such appeal; and upon such notice being given, and such recognizance being entered into, such justice is hereby empowered to discharge such person out of custody; and the court at such general or quarter sessions shall hear and determine the matter of such appeal, and shall make such order therein as shall to the said court seem meet, and in case of the dismissal of the appeal, or the affirmation of the conviction, shall issue the necessary process for the apprehension and punishment of the offender according to the conviction."

Sessions may determine.

X. Limitations, &c. of Actions—Trespass Costs, &c.

The 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 18, enacts, "that in all cases where an action shall be brought against any justice of the peace, constable, or other person, for or on account of any matter or thing whatsoever done or commanded by him in the execution of his duty or office under this act, such justice, constable, or other person, if he shall have judgment in his favour, shall have treble costs awarded to him by the court, unless the judge shall certify that there was a reasonable cause for such action."

Justices, &c. to have treble costs, if judgment be in their favour.

Sect. 19. "That every such action shall be commenced within three calendar months after the cause of action or complaint shall have arisen, and not afterwards; and if any person or persons shall be sued for any matter or thing which he, she, or they shall have done in the execution of this act, he, she, or they may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence."

Limitation of actions.

XI. Removal of Convicts to their Settlements.

By the 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 20, it is enacted, "that every person who under the provisions of this act shall have been convicted as an idle and disorderly person, or as a rogue and vagabond, shall be deemed to be actually chargeable to the parish, township, or place in which such person shall reside; and such person shall be liable to be removed to the parish of his or her last legal settlement, by the order of two justices of the peace of the division or place in which such person shall reside."

Persons convicted chargeable to parish in which they reside.

XII. General Saving and Exemptions.

Sect. 14. "That all the power, authority, and jurisdiction of his majesty's court of session of the said county palatine of Chester, and of the judges thereof, and of his Court of Exchequer of the said county palatine, and of the chamberlain and vice-chamberlain thereof, and also of his judges and courts of great sessions, both in law and equity, in the principality of Wales, shall cease and determine at the commencement of this act; and that all suits then depending in any of the said courts, if in equity, shall be transferred, with all the proceedings thereon, to his majesty's Court of Chancery or Court of Exchequer, as the plaintiff, or (in default of his making choice before the last day of next Michaelmas term) as any defendant shall think fit, and if in law, to the Court of Exchequer, there to be dealt with and decided according to the practice of those courts respectively, or of the court from whence the same shall be transferred, according to the discretion of the court to which the same shall be transferred; which court shall, for the purpose of such suits only, be deemed and taken to have all the power and jurisdiction, to all intents and purposes, possessed before the passing of this act by the court from whence such suit shall be removed."

1 Will. 4, c. 70.

Suits to be transferred.

Sect. 15. "Provided, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to abolish or affect the obligations and duties, or the jurisdiction or rights now lawfully imposed upon, performed, or claimed and exercised by the mayor and citizens of Chester in the courts of the county of the city of Chester, or otherwise, save and except that such writs of error or false judgment as may now by any charter or usage of the said corporation be brought upon the judgments of the said courts, or any of them, before any of the courts abolished by this act, shall hereafter be issued, as in other cases, from inferior courts, and be returnable into his majesty's Court of King's Bench."

Not to affect the rights of the corporation of Chester.

Sect. 16. "That all persons who on or before the passing of this act shall have been admitted as attorneys, and shall then be practising in any of the courts of sessions or great sessions in the county palatine of Chester, or in Wales respectively, shall be entitled, upon the payment of 1s., to have their names entered upon a roll to be kept for that purpose in each of the superior courts of Westminster, and thereupon be allowed to practise in such courts in all actions and suits against persons residing, at the commencement of the suit, within the county of Chester or principality of Wales; and that all persons having served, or now actually serving, as clerks to such attorneys under articles, and who would otherwise be entitled to be admitted as attorneys of the said courts of great sessions, may, on or before the expiration of six months after the passing of this act, be admitted as attorneys of the said courts at Westminster, for the purpose of practising there, in the like matters only, without payment of any greater duty than would be now payable by law upon their admission as attorneys of such courts of great sessions respectively."

Attorneys of courts of great sessions allowed to practise, on payment of certain fees.

Sect. 17. "That all attorneys and solicitors now actually admitted and practising in any of the said courts of sessions or great sessions may be admitted as attorneys of the said courts at Westminster, in like manner as is now or may be hereafter prescribed for the admission of other persons as attorneys therein, upon payment of such sum for duty, in addition to the sum already paid by them in that behalf, as shall, together with such latter sum, amount to the full duty required upon admission of attorneys in the said courts at Westminster; and that all persons having served, or now actually serving, under articles as clerks to such attorneys or solicitors of any of the said courts of sessions or great sessions, may, at the expiration of their respective times of service, be admitted as attorneys of the said courts at Westminster, in like manner, and upon payment of the like duty, as if they had served under articles as clerks to attorneys of the last-mentioned courts."

Attorneys of great sessions may be admitted as attorneys at Westminster.

Sect. 19. "That, from and after the time herein appointed for the commencement of this act, assizes shall be held for the trial and despatch of all matters, criminal and civil, within the county of Chester and the several counties and county towns in the principality of Wales, under and by virtue of commissions of assize, oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, and other writs and commissions, to be issued in like manner and form as hath been usual for the counties in England; and all laws and statutes now in force relating to the execution of such commissions, when issued for counties in England, shall extend and be applied to the execution of the commissions issued for the county of Chester and the counties of Wales under the authority of this act."

Assizes to be held in Chester and Wales.

Sect. 20. "That, until it shall be otherwise provided by law, one of the two judges appointed to hold the sessions of assizes under his majesty's commission within the county of Chester and principality of Wales shall, in such order and at such times as they shall appoint, proceed to hold such assizes at the several places where the same have heretofore been most usually held within South Wales; and the other of such judges shall proceed to hold such assizes at the several places where the same have heretofore been most usually held in North Wales; and both of such judges shall hold the assizes in and for the county of Chester in like manner as in other counties of England."

Records of the several courts abolished to be kept as heretofore, until otherwise provided for.

Sect. 27. "That the records, muniments, and writings of the several courts abolished by this act shall, until otherwise provided by law, be kept by the same persons and in the same places as before the passing of this act; and that the Court of Common Pleas shall have the like power and authority to amend the records of fines and recoveries passed heretofore in any of the courts abolished by this act, as if the same had been levied, suffered, or had in the Court of Common Pleas: provided always, that in case of the death of any such person before any other provision shall have been made for keeping such records, muniments, and writings, the custody thereof shall be with the clerks of the peace of the several counties to which counties the same shall respectively belong."

For passing accounts of sheriffs of county of Chester and principality of Wales.

Sect. 33. "That the clerk of assize, within ten days after the conclusion of the assizes in the county of Chester, and in each county in Wales, shall make out a roll containing the names and places of residence of all persons liable to the payment of any fines, issues, amercements, recognizances, compositions, or other sums imposed or forfeited during the preceding assizes, with the sums set opposite to each name, and shall forthwith transmit the same to the sheriff, with an order upon the sheriff, signed in the name of one of the judges of assize, directing the sheriff to cause such sums to be levied and recovered from the parties liable to pay the same, which order shall be of the same force and efficacy, and be returnable to the same person or persons, as any writ or process heretofore issued to the sheriff for the like purpose; and the sheriff, upon the receipt thereof, shall proceed to levy the sums in the said roll mentioned, and shall be accountable for the same, and all arrears thereof, in the same manner, at the same time, and to the same officer, and shall pass his accounts before the same officer or officers, as he hath been heretofore accustomed."

When quarter sessions are to be held.

Sect. 35. "That, in the year of our Lord 1831, and afterwards, the justices of the peace in every county, riding, or division for which quarter sessions of the peace by law ought to be held, shall hold their general quarter sessions of the peace in the first week after the eleventh day of October, in the first week after the twenty-eighth day of December, in the first week after the thirty-first day of March, and in the first week after the twenty-fourth day of June; and that all acts, matters, and things done, performed, and transacted at the times appointed by this act for the holding of the general quarter sessions of the peace shall be as valid and binding to all intents and purposes as if the same had been done, performed, and transacted at general quarter sessions of the peace holden at the times by law limited for the holding thereof before the passing of this act."

We have already pointed out who may be arrested, and for what crimes, at what time, in what places, and by whom. See Arrest, Vol. I.

Who may be arrested, and for what.

We have also seen as to when a party may be arrested without a warrant: see Arrest, Vol. I. In general, it is best to obtain a warrant, if there be time: 1 Chit. C. L. 15. Magistrates, however, seldom grant a warrant in the first instance in cases of misdemeanor, unless in aggravated cases, or where there is a likelihood of the party's absconding, if he be apprized of the complaint being made against him: in ordinary cases, it is most usual to issue a summons in the first instance, and if that be disobeyed, then to issue a warrant. See 2 Barnard. 34, 77, 101.

Arrest without warrant.

Summons, when most proper.

In all cases where the king is no party, or where no corporal punishment is appointed, as in cases for servants' wages and the like, a summons is the more proper process, and for default of appearance the justice may proceed; and so indeed oftentimes it is directed by special statutes.

If a justice see a felony or other breach of the peace committed in his presence, he may in his own person apprehend the felon. And so he may by word command any person to apprehend him, and such command is a good warrant without writing: but, if the same be done in his absence, then he must issue his warrant in writing. 2 Hale, 86; Dalt. c. 169.

Justice arresting without warrant.

A warrant may be granted by the privy council or secretaries of state, Fortescue, 140, Lord Raym. 65; by the speaker of the House of Commons, 14 East, 163, or Lords, 8 T. R. 314; by justices of gaol delivery, 1 Leach, 116, or oyer and terminer, Hale, 599; justices at sessions, ib.; or by a judge of the Court of King's Bench, 1 Hale, 578; 2 Barnard. 28. But warrants are most usually granted by a single justice of the peace. 4 Bla. Com. 290; 1 Chit. C. L. 34.

Warrant, by whom granted.

In all cases of treason, felony, or actual breach of the peace, a magistrate may, on a proper charge made, or on his own view, issue a warrant to apprehend the suspected offender. 2 Hale, 72, 78; 2 Haw. c. 12; Butt v. Conant, 1 B. & B. 548. Also, for every misdemeanor or offence indictable at sessions, and which subjects the delinquent to corporal punishment, though it does not amount to a breach of the peace, a justice of the peace may issue his warrant to apprehend the charged offender, on the ground that the law impliedly affords power to issue a warrant, when it gives jurisdiction over the offence; and perjury, and libels, and nuisances, when persisted in, subject the offender to such criminal process. 1 Chit. C. L. 13; Butt v. Conant, 1 B. & B. 548; 4 Moore, 195, S.C.; 2 Haw. c. 13; 12 Rep. 131. And there are some misdemeanors for which particular acts of Parliament expressly authorize a justice of the peace to issue his warrant.

When may be granted.

Lord Hale proves at large, contrary to the opinion of Lord Coke (4 Inst. 177), that a justice hath power to issue a warrant to apprehend a person suspected of felony, before he is indicted; and that though the original suspicion be not in himself, but in the party that prays his warrant. 2 Hale, 107, 110. See Vol. III. p. 469. For the justices are judges of the reasonableness of the suspicion, and when they have examined the party accusing touching the reasons of his suspicion, if they find the causes of suspicion to be reasonable, it is now become the justices' suspicion as well as their's. 2 Hale, 79, 80. And in another place, speaking of this opinion of Lord Coke, he delivers himself seemingly with a kind of warmth not usual to him: "I think," says he, "the law is not so, and the constant practice, in all cases, hath obtained against it, and it would be pernicious to the kingdom if it should be as Lord Coke delivers it; for malefactors would escape unexamined and undiscovered, for a man may have a probable and strong presumption of the guilt of a person, whom yet he cannot positively swear to be guilty." 1 Hale, 579. Mr. Hawkins likewise seems to be of the same opinion against Lord Coke, but delivers himself with his wonted caution and candour. "It seems probable," he says, "that the practice of justices of the peace, in relation to this matter, is now become a law, and that a justice may justify the granting of a warrant for the arrest of any person, upon strong grounds of suspicion, for a felony, or other misdemeanor, before any indictment hath been found against him; yet in so much as justices claim this power rather by connivance than any express warrant of law, and since the undue execution of it may prove so highly prejudicial to the reputation as well as the liberty of the party, a justice cannot well be too tender in his proceedings of this kind, and seems to be punishable not only at the suit of the king, but also of the party grieved, if he grant any such warrant groundlessly and maliciously, without such a probable cause as might induce a candid and impartial man to suspect the party to be guilty." 2 Haw. c. 13, s. 18.

Before a justice of peace grants a warrant for the apprehension of an offender, it is prudent, in all cases, especially in cases of felony, to examine the person requiring the warrant, or his witnesses, upon oath. And if, upon such examination, it appear either that the party has actually committed the offence imputed to him, or that there are reasonable grounds to suspect him of having committed it, the justice should grant the warrant. Arch. Forms of Conviction, §c. 1 Chit. C. L. 31; 1 Hale, 582; 2 Hale, 111.

Liability of magistrate.

See the mode of conducting such examination, title Examination, Vol. II.

If a magistrate should grant his warrant, without an oath of circumstance affording a reasonable suspicion of the guilt, and the party prove to be innocent, the magistrate will be liable to an action of trespass, at the suit of the individual aggrieved. 2 Burr. 1117; 2 Atk. 70.

II. Form of Warrant.

Style of.

The warrant may be styled in divers manners: as, 1st. In the name of the king; and yet the teste must be under the name of the justice that grants it out. Or, 2ndly. It may be styled or made only in the name of the justice. Or, 3rdly. It may be made without any style, and only under the teste of the justice, or only subscribed by him.

Venue in margin.

The warrant of a judge extends over all England, and is tested England; but that of a magistrate is tested of the particular county or precinct over which his jurisdiction extends. 4 Bl. Com. 291; Fortes. 143.

Mr. Dalton says, "the warrant is the better if it bear date of the place where it is made." Dalt. c. 169.

And Lord Hale says, "the place, though it must be alleged in pleadings, need not be expressed in the warrant." 2 Hale, 111.

And Mr. Hawkins says, "It is safe, but perhaps not necessary, in the body of the warrant, to show the place where it was made: yet it seems necessary to set forth the county, in the margin at least, if it be not set forth in the body." 2 Haw. c. 13, s. 23.

Direction of.

It may be directed to the sheriff, bailiff, constable, or to any indifferent person, by name, who is no officer; for the justice may authorize any one to be his officer, whom he pleases to make such; yet it is most advisable to direct it to the constable of the precinct wherein it is to be executed, for no other constable, and, a fortiori, no private person, is compellable to serve it. 2 Harc. c. 13, s. 27; Dalt. c. 169; 2 Hale, 110.

But in the case of an act of Parliament, it is said, that if the act direct that a justice shall grant a warrant, and do not say to whom it shall be directed, by consequence of law, it must be directed to the constable, and it cannot be directed to the sheriff, unless such power be given in the act. 2 Ld. Raym. 1192; 2 Salk. 381; sed vide 1 H. Bla. 15, n.

In R. v. Weir and others, 1 B. & C. 288, 2 D. & R. 444, S. C., a warrant of distress for a poor's rate, directed to the constables of Woolwich, without naming them as individuals, was held not legally executed by them out of their jurisdiction, viz. in St. Paul's, Deptford. Now, however, by the 5 Geo.

IV. c. 18, s. 6, constables may execute warrants out of their precincts, provided the place in which such warrants are executed be within the jurisdiction of the justice granting or backing the same. See Arrest, Vol. I.; Constable, Vol. I.

The warrant ought regularly to mention the name of the party to be attached, and must not be left in general, or with blanks to be filled up by the party afterwards. 2 Hale, 114; Dalt. c. 169; and see Burdett v. Fern, 2 Wils. 47; Housin v. Burrow, 6 T. R. 122.

If the name of the party to be arrested be unknown, the warrant may be issued against him, by the best description the nature of the case will allow, as "the body of a man whose name is unknown, but whose person is well known, and who is employed as the driver of cattle, and wears a badge, No. 573." 1 Hale, 577. If there be a mistake in the name of the supposed offender, or if the name of the officer be inserted without authority, and after the issuing of the warrant, or if the officer exceed the limits of his authority, and be killed, this will amount to no more than manslaughter in the person whose liberty is thus invaded. Fost. 312; 6 T. R. 236. But if the warrant be filled up by the magistrate before he issues it, though after he signed it, the proceeding is regular, and killing the officer endeavouring to arrest the party is murder. 8 T. R. 455; 2 Leach, 929.

A general warrant, upon a complaint of robbery, to apprehend all persons suspected, and to bring them before a justice, hath been ruled void; and false imprisonment lies against him that issues such a warrant. 1 Hale, 580; 2 Hale, 112. So, a general warrant to apprehend the authors, printers, and publishers of a libel, without naming them, is illegal. Money v. Leach, 1 Bl. Rep. 555; 19 Howell's St. Tr. 1002.

General warrants, to take up loose, idle, and disorderly people, 3 Burr. 1766, and search-warrants, 2 Haw. c. 13, s. 11, are the only exceptions to this rule.

Regularly, the warrant, if it be for the peace or good behaviour, or the like, where sureties are to be found or required, ought to contain the special cause and matter whereupon it is granted, to the intent that the party upon whom it is to be served may provide his sureties ready, and take them with him to the justice to be bound for him; but if the warrant be for treason, murder, or felony, or other capital offence, or for great conspiracies, rebellious assemblies, or the like, it hath been said that it needeth not to contain any special cause, but the warrant of the justice may be to bring the party before him, to make answer to such things or matters generally as shall be objected against him on the king's behalf. Dalt. c. 169; 2 Haw. c. 13, s. 25; 2 Hale, 111; 1 Chit. C. L. 41.

But Mr. Lombard says, "every warrant made by a justice of the peace ought to comprehend the special matter upon which it proceedeth; even as all the king's writs do bear their proper cause in their mouth with them: and, as for the form that is commonly used, to answer to such things as shall be objected, and such like, they were not fetched out of the old learned precedents, but lately brought in by such as either knew not, or cared not, what they writ." Lamb. 87; and see 1 Chit. C. L. 41.

For the concise mode of describing the offence, see Commitment, Vol. I. 69 to 972.

The warrant is not returnable at any particular time, but continues in force until it is fully executed and obeyed, though it were seven years, provided the magistrate so long live. Per Lord Kenyon, C. J., Dickenson v. Brown, 2 Keble's N. P. 234; 1 Esp. 218, S. C.

A warrant to arrest the party, "to the end that he may become bound, &c." appear at the next sessions," &c. means the next sessions after the arrest, and not after the date of the warrant. Therefore, the officer executing it may satisfy an arrest after the sessions next ensuing the date of the warrant. Maynor v. Parker and others, 8 T. R. 110.

The warrant need not be returnable at a place certain. 4 Bl. Com. 291.

The warrant may issue to bring the party before the justice who granted the warrant specially, and then the officer is bound to bring him before the same justice; but if the warrant be to bring him before any justice, then it is in the election of the officer to bring him before what justice of the county he thinks fit, and not in the election of the prisoner. 1 Hale, 582; 2 Hale, 112.

By the 24 *Geo. offender or offenders, and all other proceedings relating thereto, to the constable, tithingman, or other person or persons so apprehending such offender or offenders as aforesaid, who are hereby required to receive the same, and to deliver over such recognizance, examination, and other proceedings, to the clerk of assizes, or clerk of the peace of the county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place where such offender or offenders is or are required to appear by virtue of such recognizance; and such recognizance, examination, or confession shall be as good and effectual in law, to all intents and purposes, and of the same force and validity, as if the same had been entered into, taken, or acknowledged before a justice or justices of the peace in and for the proper county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place where the offence was committed, and the same proceedings shall be had thereon; and in case such constable, tithingman, or other person to whom such recognizance, examination, confession, or other proceedings shall be so delivered as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect to deliver over the same to the clerk of assizes, or clerk of the peace of the county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place where such offender is required to appear by virtue of such recognizance, such constable, tithingman, or other person shall forfeit the sum of 10*l.*, to be recovered against him by bill, plaint, or information, in any of his majesty's courts at Westminster, by any person or persons who will prosecute or sue for the same; wherein no essoin, protection, or wager of law shall be allowed, or more than one imparlance; and in case the offence for which such offender or offenders shall be apprehended and taken in any other county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place shall not be bailable in law, or such offender or offenders shall not give bail for his appearance at the next assizes or general gaol delivery, or next general quarter-sessions of the peace, to be held in and for the county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place where the offence was committed, to the satisfaction of the justice before whom such offender or offenders shall be brought in such other county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place; then, and in that case, the constable, tithingman, or other person or persons so apprehending such offender or offenders, shall carry and convey such offender or offenders before one of his majesty's justices of peace of the proper county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place where such offence was committed, there to be dealt with according to law."

And the justice may further order (if he think fit) the party, according as he shall appear bailable or not bailable upon the face of the warrant, to be brought before himself, or some other justice or justices of that county, or to be carried back into the county from whence the warrant did issue.

The magistrate cannot exercise a discretion in this matter; but he must back the warrant, if oath be duly made of the hand-writing of the justice who granted it. R. v. Kynaston, 1 East, 117.

Also, by the 13 Geo. III. c. 31, s. 1, "if any person or persons against whom a warrant shall be issued by any justice or justices of peace of any county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place, within that part of Great Britain called England, for any crime or offence against the laws of that part of the United Kingdom, shall escape, go into, reside, or be in any place of that part of Great Britain called Scotland, it shall and may be lawful for the sheriff, or steward depute or substitute, or any justice of peace of the county or place where such person or persons shall escape, go into, reside, or be, to indorse his name on the said warrant, which warrant, so indorsed, shall be a sufficient authority to the person or persons bringing such warrant, and to all persons to whom such warrant was originally directed; and also to all sheriffs' officers, stewards' officers, constables, and other peace-officers of the county or place where such warrant shall be so indorsed, to execute the said warrant in the county or place where it is so indorsed, by apprehending the person or persons against whom such warrant is granted, and to convey him, her, or them into the county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place of that part of Great Britain called England, being adjacent to that part of Great Britain called Scotland, in which the crime was committed, and before one of the justices of peace of such county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place, to be there dealt with according to law; or in case the crime was committed in a county not next adjacent to that part of Great Britain called Scotland, then, and in every such case, to convey him, her, or them into any county of that part of Great Britain called England, next adjacent to that part of Great Britain called Scotland, and before one of the justices of peace of such county, which justice of peace is hereby authorized and required to proceed with regard to such person or persons, in the manner directed by an act made in the twenty-fourth year of the reign of his majesty King George the Second, intituled, 'An Act for amending and making more effectual a Clause in an Act passed in the last Session of Parliament, for the apprehending of Persons in any County or Place, upon Warrants granted by Justices of the Peace of any other County or Place,' as if the said person or persons had been apprehended in the said county."

Sect. 2. "That, from and after the passing of this act, if any person or persons against whom a warrant shall be issued by the lord justice-general, lord chief-justice clerk, or any of the lords commissioners of judiciary, or by any sheriff, or steward-depute, or substitute, or justice of the peace of that part of Great Britain called Scotland, for any crime or offence against the laws of that part of the United Kingdom, shall escape, go into, reside, or be in any place of that part of Great Britain called England, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of peace of the county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place where such person or persons shall escape, go into, reside, or be, to indorse his name on the said warrant, which warrant, so indorsed, shall be a sufficient authority to the person or persons bringing such warrant, and to all persons to whom such warrant was originally directed; and also to all constables or other peace-officers of the county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place where such warrant shall be so indorsed, to execute the said warrant in the county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place where it is so indorsed, by apprehending the person or persons against whom such warrant is granted, and to convey him, her, or them into the county or place of that part of Great Britain called Scotland, being adjacent to that part of Great Britain called England, where the crime was committed; and before the sheriff, or steward-depute, or substitute, or one of the justices of the peace of such county or place, to be there dealt with according to law; or in case the crime was committed in a county not next adjacent to that part of Great Britain called England, then, and in such case, to convey him, her, or them into any county of that part of Great Britain called Scotland, next adjacent to that part of Great Britain called England, and before the sheriff or steward-depute, substitute, or one of the justices of the peace of such county, which sheriff, steward, or justice of the peace is hereby required to proceed with regard to such person or persons according to the rules and practice of the law of Scotland, as if the said person or persons had been apprehended in the said county."

Sect. 3. "That the expense of removing prisoners as aforesaid shall be repaid to the person defraying the same, by the treasurer of the county of that part of Great Britain called England, or by the sheriff, or steward-depute or substitute of the county of that part of Great Britain called Scotland, in which the crime was committed; the amount of that expense being previously ascertained by an account thereof, verified upon oath before two of the justices of the peace of such county, and allowed and signed by them."

The 44 Geo. III. c. 92, s. 3, enacts, that "if any person or persons against whom a warrant shall be issued by any of the judges of his majesty's Court of King's Bench, or any justice of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, or any justice or justices of the peace, or other person having authority to issue the same within Ireland, for any crime or offence against the laws in force in Ireland, shall escape, go into, reside, or be in any place in England or Scotland respectively, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace of the county, stewardry, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place, in England or Scotland respectively, whither or where such person or persons shall escape, go into, reside, or be, to indorse his name on such warrant, which warrant, so indorsed, shall be a sufficient authority to the person or persons bringing such warrant, and to all persons to whom such warrant was originally directed, and also to all constables or other peace-officers of the county, stewardry, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place, where such warrant shall be so indorsed, to execute the said warrant in the county, riding, division, city, liberty, town, or place, where it is so indorsed, by apprehending the person or persons against whom such warrant is granted, and to convey him, her, or them by the most direct way into Ireland, and before one of the justices of the peace of the county in Ireland, living near the place and in the county where he, she, or they shall arrive and land; which justice of the peace is hereby required to proceed with regard to such person or persons as if the said person or persons had been legally apprehended in the said county in Ireland."

By sect. 4 the same provision is made as to offenders escaping from England or Scotland into Ireland, being apprehended and conveyed back again to England or Scotland.

By the 45 Geo. III. c. 92, s. 1, after reciting the 13 Geo. III. c. 31, and 44 Geo. III. c. 92, and that there is no provision in the said acts for admitting to bail persons so apprehended for bailable offences, it is enacted, "that in case any person or persons shall be apprehended in one of the said parts of the United Kingdom for an offence which was committed, or charged to have been committed, in either of the other parts of the same, under any warrant indorsed in such manner as is in that respect provided by virtue of either of the said recited acts, such person or persons shall and may be taken before the judge or justice who indorsed the said warrant, or before some other justice or justices of the county, stewardry, city, liberty, town, or place where the same was indorsed; and in case the offence be bailable in law, and such offender or offenders shall be willing and ready to give bail for his, her, or their appearance, according to the exigence of the said warrant, such judge or justice or justices by whom such warrant was indorsed, or before whom any such offender or offenders shall be brought, shall and may proceed with such offender or offenders, and take bail for him, her, or them, according to the exigence of the said warrant, in the same manner as the judge or justice who originally issued the same should or might have done; and such judge or justice or justices so taking bail as aforesaid shall take the recognizance or bail-bond of the said offender or offenders, and of his, her, or their bail, in duplicate, and shall deliver one of such duplicates to the constable, or other officer or officers, or person or persons so apprehending such offender or offenders as aforesaid, who are hereby required to receive the same, and to deliver, or cause to be delivered, such recognizance or bail-bond to the clerk of the crown, or clerk of the peace, or other proper officer for receiving the same, belonging to the court in which by such recognizance or bail-bond such offender or offenders shall be bound to appear, and such recognizance or bail-bond shall be as good and effectual in law, to all intents and purposes, and of the same force and validity, as if the same had been entered into, taken, or acknowledged before a judge or justice or justices of the peace of the county, stewardry, city, town, liberty, or place, where the offence was committed; and the said judge or justice or justices so taking bail as aforesaid, shall transmit the other of such duplicates to the Court of Exchequer of such part of the United Kingdom in which such bail shall be taken, there to be kept of record; and it shall and may be lawful for the court, in which any person so bound to appear shall forfeit his or her said recognizance or bail-bond, to transmit a certificate, testifying the forfeiture thereof, under the seal of the court, or under the hand and seal of one of the judges or justices of the same, to the Court of Exchequer, in that part of the United Kingdom in which such recognizance or bail-bond shall have been taken; and it shall and may be lawful for such Court of Exchequer to proceed upon such certificate to levy the sum so forfeited, in the same manner in which they may proceed upon any recognizance or bail-bond, taken and forfeited within the same part of the United Kingdom, and estreated due course into the said court: provided always, that if such offence be not bailable in law, or such offender or offenders shall not give bail for his, her, or their appearance, according to the exigence of such warrant, the said judge or justice or justices before whom such offender or offenders shall be brought, shall remand him, her, or them to the custody of the constable or other officer or person who shall have apprehended such offender or offenders, and such constable, officer, or other person shall proceed to convey such offender or offenders into that part of the United Kingdom wherein the offence was committed, by such ways and means as are provided by the said recited acts respectively."

Sect. 2. "And whereas it may happen, by reason of the difference in the law prevailing in the said different parts of the United Kingdom, that the judge or justice or justices before whom any offender or offenders shall be brought, under such warrant so indorsed, may not know whether the offence mentioned in such warrant be or be not bailable; for the better information, therefore, of such judge, or justice or justices, in that particular," be it enacted, "that, in case any person suing out such warrant shall show, by affidavit or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the judge or justice granting such warrant, that it may be necessary to execute such warrant in a part of the United Kingdom different from that in which such warrant is issued, and it shall appear also to the judge or justice granting such warrant, that it is granted for an offence for which it would not be lawful for any judge, or justice or justices, before whom such offender or offenders might be brought, by reason of the indorsement of such warrant, as directed by the said recited acts, to admit such offender or offenders to bail, such judge or justice granting such warrant shall, upon the face of such warrant, write the words 'not bailable'; and, in all cases in which such words shall not have been so written, it shall and may be lawful for the judge, or justice or justices, before whom any offender or offenders may be brought, under such warrant so indorsed, to admit such offender or offenders to bail."

Sect. 3. "And whereas it is fit to provide for the appearance of persons to answer in cases where warrants are not usually issued, and to give evidence in criminal prosecutions in every part of the United Kingdom;" it is enacted, "that the service of every writ of subpoena or other process upon any person, in any one of the parts of the United Kingdom, requiring the appearance of such person to answer or give evidence in any criminal prosecution in any other of the parts of the same, shall be as good and effectual in law as if the same had been served in that part of the United Kingdom where the person so served is required to appear; and, in case such person so served shall not appear, according to the exigence of such writ or process, it shall be lawful for the court out of which the same issued, upon proof made of the service thereof, to the satisfaction of the said court, to transmit a certificate of such default, under the seal of the same court, or under the hand of one of the judges or justices of the same, to the Court of King's Bench in England, in case such service was had in England, or, in case such service was had in Scotland, to the Court of Justiciary in Scotland, or, in case such service was had in Ireland, to the Court of King's Bench in Ireland; and the said last-mentioned courts respectively shall and may thereupon proceed against and punish the person so having made default, in like manner as they might have done if such person had neglected or refused to appear in obedience to a writ of subpoena or other process issued out of such last-mentioned courts respectively."

Sect. 4. "That none of such last-mentioned courts shall, in any case, proceed against or punish any person for having made default, by not appearing to give evidence in obedience to any writ of subpoena or other process for that purpose, unless it shall be made to appear to such court that a reasonable and sufficient sum of money to defray the expenses of coming and attending to give evidence, and of returning from giving such evidence, had been tendered to such person at the time when such writ of subpoena or other process was served upon such person."

The 54 Geo. III. c. 186, after reciting the 13 Geo. III. c. 31, 44 Geo. III. c. 92, and 45 Geo. III. c. 92, repeals the fifth and sixth sections of the last-mentioned act, and enacts, sect. 2, "that, from and after the passing of this act, all warrants issued in England, Scotland, or Ireland respectively, may and shall be indorsed and executed, and enforced and acted upon, in any part of the United Kingdom, in such and the like manner as is directed by the said first-recited act of the thirteenth year of the reign of his present majesty, in relation to warrants issued or granted in England and Scotland respectively, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as if all the provisions of the said act were in this act severally and separately repeated and re-enacted, and made part of this act, as to every part of the United Kingdom, and as to all justices of the peace, sheriffs' officers, constables, or other officer or officers of the peace in Ireland, as well as in England and Scotland respectively."

MODE OF EXECUTING WARRANT, &c.

Sect. 3. "That it shall be lawful for any judge of any of his majesty's courts of record in Westminster, of the Court of Sessions in the county palatine of Chester, or of any of the courts of great sessions in Wales, or for any judge in any of his majesty's courts of record in Dublin, to indorse any letters of second diligence issued in Scotland, for compelling the attendance of any witness or witnesses resident in England, Wales, or Ireland, upon any criminal trial in Scotland; and such letters shall, upon such indorsement, have the like force and effect as the same would have in Scotland, and shall entitle the bearer thereof to apprehend the witness or witnesses mentioned therein, and to convey such witness or witnesses to Scotland, for the purposes of the trial or trials in respect of which such letters shall have been issued, without any tender of any expense or expenses of any such witness or witnesses; any thing contained in the said last-recited act of the forty-fifth year aforesaid to the contrary notwithstanding."

Judges, in either country, to indorse letters of second diligence.

By the 48 Geo. III. c. 58, s. 2, reciting the provisions of the 13 Geo. III. c. 31, and the 45 Geo. III. c. 92, and that it is expedient that like provisions should be made for the execution in Scotland of warrants to be issued by other persons than justices of the peace having authority to issue the same in England, it is enacted, "that, from and after the passing of this act, all clauses, matters, and things in the said recited acts, whereby the execution in Scotland of any warrant or warrants issued by any justice or justices of the peace in England for any crime or offence against the laws of that part of the United Kingdom is authorized and regulated, shall extend to all warrants issued by any of the justices of his majesty's Court of King's Bench in England, or of the courts of great sessions in Wales, or by any justice of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, or other person having authority to issue the same in England, for any crime or offence against the laws of England, in as full and ample a manner, to all intents and purposes, as if such last-mentioned justices and persons were specially named in the said recited acts."

Power under recited acts as to execution in Scotland of warrants of justices of peace issued in England, extended to warrants issued by judges of King's Bench, &c.

IV. Mode of executing Warrant, and herein of Breaking open Doors.

The observations already made under title Arrest, as to the mode of arresting a party, will here apply. See that title, Vol. I.

The officer to whom a warrant is directed and delivered ought, with all speed and secrecy, to find out the party, and then to execute the warrant. Dalt. c. 169.

To be gone about immediately.

The party to whom the warrant is directed may execute it by arresting the party charged any where within the jurisdiction of the magistrate granting or backing it. 5 East, 233; 5 Geo. IV. c. 18, s. 6, Vol. I. p. 799. A warrant to arrest for a felony may be executed in any franchise in the county. 1 Hale, 16.

Where to be executed.

A warrant directed to several may be executed by any one of them. 1 East's By whom. 2. C. 320; 2 Taun. 161; Dalt. c. 169.

When the party named in the warrant employs others to assist him, he must be so near as to be acting in the arrest, in order to render it legal. Howp. 66.

The warrant may be executed at any time while it is in force. 9 Rep. 65; East's P. C. 324; 3 Taun. 14. We have already seen how long it continues in force, ante, 987.

Time of execution.

A person may be twice apprehended under the same warrant, if the purposes of the warrant have not been effected. Peake's Rep. 234.

A private person cannot raise power to arrest or detain a felon. 1 Hale, 11. But any justice, or the sheriff, may take of the county any number that he shall think meet, to pursue, arrest, and imprison traitors, murderers, robbers, and other felons, or such as do break or go about to break or disturb the king's peace; and every man, being required, ought to assist and aid them, on pain of fine and imprisonment. Dalt. c. 171.

It is not justifiable for a justice, sheriff, or other officer, to assemble the posse comitatus, or raise a power or assembly of people, upon their own heads, without just cause. Dalt. c. 171.

But, where a justice, sheriff, or other officer, is enabled to take the power of the county, it seemeth they may command and ought to have the aid and attendance of all knights, gentlemen, yeomen, husbandmen, labourers, tradesmen, servants, and apprentices, and of all other persons being above the age of fifteen years, and able to travel. Dalt. c. 171.

Women, ecclesiastical persons, and such as be decrepit or diseased, shall not be compelled to attend them. Id.

And, in such case, it is referred to the discretion of the justice, sheriff, or other officer, what number they will have to attend on them, and how and after what manner they shall be armed or otherwise furnished. Id.

Sheriff may deputate.

If a warrant be directed to the sheriff, he may command his bailiff, under-sheriff, or other sworn and known officer, to serve it, without writing any precept. But if he will command another man that is no such officer to serve it, he must give him a written precept; otherwise an action of false imprisonment will lie. Lamb. 89.

But every other person to whom it is directed must personally execute it: yet it seems that any one may lawfully assist him. 2 Haw. c. 14, s. 29.

Directions of warrant to be observed strictly.

The directions of the warrant must be strictly observed, or the party executing it will not be justified in his acts, and may be treated as a trespasser; as, if the warrant be to arrest A., and he arrest B. See Com. Dig. Imprisonment, (B.); 2 Haw. c. 13, s. 31; 2 B. & P. 162; 2 M. & S. 261; see, also, Constable, Vol. I.

Showing the warrant.

A person sworn and commonly known, and acting within his own precinct, need not show his warrant, but he ought to acquaint the party with the substance of it. 2 Haw. c. 13, s. 28.

An officer giveth sufficient notice what he is when he saith to the party, "I arrest you in the king's name;" and, in such case, the party at his peril ought to obey him, though he knoweth him not to be an officer; and if he have no lawful warrant, the party grieved may have his action of false imprisonment. Dalt. c. 169.

But the learned editor of Hale's history observes hereupon, that the books referred to intend the general warrant constituting such person an officer, as a bailiff or the like, in a civil action; though it may be otherwise in case of felony, because, in such case, a private person may arrest a felon without any warrant at all. 2 Hale, 116; 1 id. 458, notis.

In Hall v. Roche, 8 T. R. 188, the doctrine that even a known officer is not obliged to show his authority when demanded, was considered as dangerous, because it may affect the party criminally in case of resistance; and, if homicide ensue, the legality of the warrant enters materially into the merits of the question. And Lord Kenyon observed, that he did not think a person so bound to take it for granted, that another who says he has a warrant against him, without producing it, speaks truth.

A warrant was issued to apprehend the plaintiff upon a charge of a conspiracy; a constable went to the plaintiff's house with the warrant, showed it to him, allowed him to take a copy of it, and then was accompanied by the plaintiff to the magistrate, who, after examining him, dismissed him. Trespass for assault and false imprisonment was brought against the magistrate, and a verdict was given for the defendant. Upon showing cause against a rule for setting aside the verdict, Sir J. Mansfield, C. J., held, that, as the plaintiff went voluntarily before the magistrate, the warrant being made no other way of than as a summons, this was no arrest, and therefore the verdict was right. Arrowsmith v. Le Mesurier, 2 N. R. 211.

But if he act out of his precinct, or be not sworn and commonly known, he must show his warrant, if demanded. 2 Haw. c. 13, s. 28. Otherwise the party may make resistance, and needs not to obey it. Dalt. c. 169.

If the constable hath no warrant, but doth it by virtue of his office as a constable, it is sufficient to notify that he is a constable, or that he arrests in the king's name. 1 Hale, 589.

In the case of a warrant of distress, issued by a justice of the peace, for levying a pecuniary forfeiture or sum of money, it is specially provided by the 27 Geo. II. c. 20, that the officer executing the same shall, if required, show his warrant to the person whose goods are distrained, and shall suffer a copy thereof to be taken.

In no case is a constable required to part with the warrant out of his own possession; for that is his justification. 1 East's P. C. 319; 2 Ld. Raym. 1196; 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 6, post, p. 998.

Constable not to part with warrant.

As to the case of breaking open doors, in order to apprehend offenders, it is to be observed, that the law doth never allow of such extremities but in cases of necessity; and therefore no one can justify breaking open another's door to make an arrest, unless he first signify to those in the house the cause of his coming, and request them to give him admittance. 2 Haw. c. 14, s. 1.

In a late case it was decided, that such request was undoubtedly necessary in all cases, where the warrant is for a misdemeanor. Lannock v. Brown, 2 B. & A. 592; and see Burdett v. Abbott, 14 East, 163. Query, if it be necessary in all.

Breaking open doors. (a)

No precise form of words is required in a case of this kind: it is sufficient that the party hath notice that the officer cometh not as a mere trespasser, but claiming to act under a proper authority, provided that the officer has a legal warrant. Fest. 137.

But where a person authorized to arrest another, who is sheltered in a house, is denied quietly to enter it, in order to take him, it seems generally to be agreed that he may justify breaking open the doors in the following instances:—

1. Upon a capias grounded on an indictment for any crime whatsoever; or upon a capias from the Chancery or King's Bench, to compel a man to find sureties for the peace or good behaviour, or even upon a warrant from a justice of peace for such purpose. 2 Haw. c. 14, s. 3.

2. When one known to have committed a treason or felony, or to have given another a dangerous wound, is pursued either with or without a warrant by a constable or private person; but where one lies under a probable suspicion only, and is not indicted, it seems the better opinion at this day, Mr. Hawkins says (c. 14, s. 7), that no one can justify the breaking open doors in order to apprehend him. And this opinion he founds on Coke's 4 Inst. 177, and Hale's Pleas of the Crown, 91.

But upon a warrant for probable cause of suspicion of felony, the person to whom such warrant is directed may break open doors to take the person suspected, if upon demand he will not surrender himself, as well as if there had been an express and positive charge against him; and so (he says) hath the common practice obtained, notwithstanding the contrary opinion of Lord Coke; for, in such case, the process is for the king, and therefore a non omittas is implied. 1 Hale, 580, 583; 2 Hale, 117.

And, as he may break open such person's own house, so much more may he break open the house of another to take him; for so the sheriff may do upon civil process; but then he must at his peril see that the felon be there: for, the felon be not there, he is a trespasser to the stranger whose house it is. Hale, 117; Semayne's case, 5 Rep. 92, a.

But it seems that he that arrests as a private man, barely upon suspicion of felony, cannot justify the breaking open of doors to arrest the party suspected, ut he doth it at his peril; that is, if in truth he be a felon, then it is justifiable,

(a) See also 1 Chit. C. L. 51 to 59.

MODE OF EXECUTING WARRANT, &c.

but if he be innocent, but upon a reasonable cause suspected, it is not justifiable. 1 Hale, 82.

But a constable in such case may justify, and the reason of the difference is this: because in the former case it is but a thing permitted to private persons to arrest for suspicion, and they are not punishable if they omit it; and therefore they cannot break open doors; but in case of a constable, he is punishable if he omit it upon complaint. 2 Hale, 92.

And, in general, an officer, upon any warrant from a justice, either for the peace or good behaviour, or in any case where the king is party, may by force break open a man's house, to arrest the offender. Dalt. c. 169.

It is justifiable for a private person to break and enter the house of another, and imprison his person, in order to prevent him murdering his wife. Handcock v. Baker, 2 B. & P. 260.

3. On a warrant to search for stolen goods, the doors may be broken open, if the goods are there; and if they are not there, the constable seems indemnified, but he that made the suggestion is punishable. 2 Hale, 151.

4. Where forcible entry or detainer is found by inquisition before justices of the peace, or appears on their view. 2 Haw. c. 14, s. 6.

5. On a capias utlagatum, or capias pro fine. Id. s. 2.

6. On the warrant of a justice of the peace for the levying of a forfeiture, in execution of a judgment, or conviction for it, grounded on any statute, which gives the whole or any part of such forfeiture to the king. Id. s. 5.

7. Where an affray is made in a house, in the view or hearing of the constable, he may break open the doors to take them. 1 Haw. c. 63, s. 16; 2 Haw. c. 14, s. 8.

8. If there be disorderly drinking or noise in a house at an unreasonable time of night, especially in inns, taverns, or ale-houses, the constable, or his watch, demanding entrance, and being refused, may break open the doors, to see and suppress the disorder. 2 Hale, 95.

9. Wherever a person is lawfully arrested for any cause, and afterwards escapes, and shelters himself in a house. 2 Haw. c. 14, s. 9.

10. But upon a general warrant, without expressing any felony or treason, or surety of the peace, the officer cannot break open a door. 1 Hale, 534.

11. Neither ought doors to be broken open to take a person, who is required to take certain oaths by virtue of a statute, because in such case the warrant is not grounded on a precedent offence. 2 Haw. c. 14, s. 11; 12 Rep. 131.

12. In a civil suit, the officer cannot justify the breaking open an outward door or window, in order to execute process. If he doth, he is a trespasser. But if he findeth the outward door open, and entereth that way, or if the door be opened to him from within, and he entereth, he may break open inward doors, if he findeth that necessary, in order to execute his process. Fost. 319; see Tidd's Prac. 9 ed. 1012.

For a man's house is his castle, for safety and repose to himself and family; but if a stranger, who is not of the family, upon a pursuit, taketh refuge in the house of another, this rule doth not extend to him,—it is not his castle, he cannot claim the benefit of sanctuary therein. Fost. 320. See Semayne's case, ant. p. 995.

And it is always to be remembered that this rule must be confined to the case of arrest upon process in civil suits only; for, where a felony hath been committed, or a dangerous wound given, or even where a minister of justice cometh armed with process founded on a breach of the peace, the party's own house is no sanctuary for him: in these cases, the justice which is due to the public must supersede every pretence of private inconvenience. Fost. 320.

13. Finally, in all these cases, if an officer, to serve any warrant, enter into a house, the doors being open, and then the doors are locked upon him, he may break them open, in order to regain his liberty. 2 Haw. c. 14, s. 11.

Killing in the arrest or pursuit.

If there be a warrant against a person for a trespass or breach of the peace, and he fly and will not yield to the arrest, or being taken, make his escape, if the officer kill him, it is murder. 2 Hale, 117; 1 East's P. C. 302.

But, if such person, either upon the attempt to arrest, or after the arrest assault the officer, to the intent to make his escape from him, and the officer, standing upon his guard, kill him, this is no felony; for he is not bound to go back to the wall, as in common cases of se defendendo, for the law is his protection. 2 Hale, 118; 1 East's P. C. 302.

But where a warrant issueth against a person for felony, and either before arrest or after he flies and defends himself with stones or weapons, so that the officer must give over his pursuit, or otherwise cannot take him without killing him, if he kill him, it is no felony. And the same law is for a constable that doth it by virtue of his office, or on hue and cry. Id.

But then there must be these cautions: 1. He must be a lawful officer; or there must be a lawful warrant. 2. The party ought to have notice of the reason of the pursuit,—namely, because a warrant is against him. 3. It must be a case of necessity, and that not such a necessity as in the former case, where an assault is made upon the officer; but this is the necessity,—namely, that he cannot otherwise be taken. 2 Hale, 119; 1 East's P. C. 312.

If an innocent person be indicted of a felony, where in truth no felony was committed, and will not suffer himself to be arrested by the officer who has a warrant for that purpose, he may lawfully be killed by him, if he cannot otherwise be taken; for there is a charge against him upon record, to which, at his peril, he is bound to answer. 1 Haw. c. 28, s. 12. See Mortimer, Vol. III.

But though a private person may arrest a felon, and if he fly, so as he cannot be taken without he be killed, it is excusable in this case for the necessity, yet it is at his peril that the party be a felon; for if he be innocent of the felony, the killing (at least before the arrest) seems at least manslaughter; for an innocent person is not bound to take notice of a private person's suspicion. 2 Hale, 119.

It is an offence of a very high nature to oppose one who lawfully endeavours to arrest another for treason or felony; and it seems that a person who so opposes an arrest for treason, whereof he knows the party to have been guilty, is thereby guilty of the treason: and that he who so opposes an arrest for felony is an accessory to the felony. 1 Haw. c. 17, s. 1; see Escape, Vol. I.; Rescue, ante.

Opposing the execution.

It hath been holden, that if a constable, after he hath arrested the party by force of a warrant, suffer him to go at large upon his promise to come again and find sureties, he cannot afterwards arrest him by force of the same warrant: however, if the party return, and put himself again under the custody of the constable, it seems it may be probably argued that the constable may lawfully detain him, and bring him before the justice in pursuance of such warrant; but in this the law doth not seem to be clearly settled. 2 Haw. c. 13, s. 9. But if the party arrested do escape, the officer, upon fresh suit, may take him again and again, so often as he escapeth, although he were out of view, or that he shall fly into another town or county. Dalt. c. 169; see Arrest, Vol. I. p. 257.

Retaking after arrest.

V. What to be done after the Arrest.

We have already considered what is to be done after the arrest; see Arrest, Vol. I. p. 266.

What to be done after arrest.

If the arrest be by virtue of a warrant, when the officer hath made the arrest, he is forthwith to bring the party, according to the direction of the warrant. If it be to bring the party before the justice who granted the warrant specially, then the officer is bound to bring him before the same justice; but if the warrant be to bring him before any justice of the county, then it is in the election of the officer to bring him before what justice he thinks fit, and not in the election of the prisoner. Foster's case, 5 Rep. 59, b.; 1 Hale, 582; 2 Hale, 112.

By an officer by warrant.

But if the time be unreasonable, as in or near the night, whereby he cannot attend the justice, or if there be danger of a present rescue, or if the party be sick, he may secure him in the stocks, or in a house, till the next day, or such time as it may be reasonable to bring him. 2 Hale, 120; see Arrest, Vol. I. p. 266.

FORMS.

Returning the warrant.

And when he hath brought him to the justice, yet he is in law still in his custody till the justice discharge, or bail, or commit him. Id.

But it is said, the constable is not obliged to return the warrant itself, but may keep it for his own justification, in case he should be questioned for what he had done, but only to return what he has done upon it. 2 Ld. Raym. 1196; 1 East's P. C. 319.

Action not to be brought against constable till demand made of
&c.

And this seems to be implied in the 24 Geo. II. c. 44, s. 6, which enacts, that "no action shall be brought against any constable, headborough, or other officer, or against any person or persons acting by his order and in his aid, for anything done in obedience to any warrant under the hand or seal of any justice of the peace, until demand hath been made or left at the usual place of his abode, by the party or parties intending to bring such action, or by his, her, or their attorney or agent, in writing, signed by the party demanding the same, of the perusal and copy of such warrant, and the same hath been refused or neglected for the space of six days after such demand; and in case, after such demand and compliance therewith, by showing the said warrant to, and permitting a copy to be taken thereof by the party demanding the same, any action shall be brought against such constable, headborough, or other officer, or against such person or persons acting in his aid for any such cause as aforesaid, without making the justice or justices who signed or sealed the said warrant defendant or defendants, that on producing or proving such warrant at the trial of such action, the jury shall give their verdict for the defendant or defendants, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction in such justice or justices; and if such action be brought jointly against such justice or justices, and also against such constable, headborough, or other officer, or person or persons acting in his or their aid as aforesaid, then on proof of such warrant the jury shall find for such constable, headborough, or other officer, and for such person and persons so acting as aforesaid, notwithstanding such defect of jurisdiction as aforesaid; and if the verdict shall be given against the justice or justices, that in such case the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall recover his, her, or their costs against him or them, to be taxed in such manner, by the proper officer, as to include such costs as such plaintiff or plaintiffs are liable to pay to such defendant or defendants for whom such verdict shall be found as aforesaid."

But they are not compellable to watch at the will of the constable, but only

 ciently weaponed. Id.

And therefore a woman required to watch may procure one to watch for her.
Comb. 243.

There is a watch that may be kept by the constable, ex officio, at all times; By the constable.
 as by the 5 Edw. III. c. 14, for night-walkers, and persons suspicious by night or day. 2 Hale, 97.

And, although a constable be not bound to any precise time for this kind of watch, nor punishable if he omit it, barely for the omission, if he be ready upon occasion to do his office when required in these cases, yet it is in his power to hold such watches as often as he pleases, and it is convenient and justifiable; and herein the watchmen are the ministers and assistants of the constable, and are under the same protection with him, and may act as he doth.
 2 Hale, 97.

Yea, it is holden, that every private person may, by the common law, arrest any suspicious night-walker, and detain him till he give a good account of himself. 2 Haw. c. 13, s. 6; see Arrest, Vol. I. p. 260.

 hath the same power as either of the former: and this seems to be within the power of any one justice, by the first assignment in the commission; but the safer way and more usual is, by order of sessions. Lamb. 186; 2 Hale, 97;
Dalt. c. 104.

And if a person will not obey the arrest of the watchmen, they may levy hue

A watchman hath a double protection of the law: 1st. Punishment for not watching.

See the provisions of the 3 Geo. IV. c. 1, and the 10 Geo. IV. c. 44, as to the police of the metropolis, title Police, ante, p. 106.

If any person refuse to watch in his turn at the commandment of the constable, the latter may present the default at the assizes or sessions, or may complain thereof to any justice of the peace, who may bind the offender to the good behaviour, and so over to the next sessions. Dalt. c. 104. And he may be indicted for the refusal. 2 Haw. c. 13, s. 4; ante, Constable, Vol. I. p. 800.

But here it is to be noted, that in Cro. Eliz. 204, which Mr. Dalton cites for his authority in this matter, it is not said that the justice may bind him to the good behaviour, but only thus,—that he may inflict punishment upon the refuser.

Troy weight is by law; and thereby are weighed silk, gold, silver, pearl, and precious stones. And this hath to the pound twelve ounces. Id.

Avoirdupois (which, in French, is as much as to say, to have full weight) is by custom; and thereby are weighed all kinds of grocery wares, drugs, butter, cheese, flesh, wax, pitch, tar, tallow, wool, hemp, flax, iron, steel, lead, and all other commodities which bear the name of garbel, and whereof issueth a refuse or waste. Sect. 16. "And whereas it is expedient that persons should be allowed to use the several weights and measures which they may have in their possession, although such weights and measures may not be in conformity with the standard weights and measures established by this act; be it therefore enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons to buy and sell goods and merchandize by any weights or measures established either by local custom, or founded on special agreement: provided always, that in order that the ratio or proportion which all such measures and weights shall bear to the standard weights and measures established by this act, shall be and become a matter of common notoriety, the ratio or proportion which all such customary measures and weights shall bear to the said standard weights and measures, shall be painted or marked upon all such customary weights and measures respectively; and that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to permit any maker of weights or measures, or any person or persons whomsoever, to make any weight or measure at any time after the first day of May, 1825, (a) except in conformity with the standard weights and measures established under the provisions of this act."

¶ Geo. 4, c. 12.

By the 6 Geo. IV. c. 12, reciting, "whereas an act was passed in the last session of Parliament, intituled, 'An Act for ascertaining and establishing Uniformity of Weights and Measures,' and the operation of certain clauses and provisions in the said act contained, is by the said act directed to take place from and after the first day of May, 1825, and the operation of certain other clauses in the said act contained, is by the said act directed to take place within three calendar months, or within six calendar months respectively, next after the passing of the said act; and it is by the said act, among other things, enacted that the several statutes, ordinances, and acts, and parts of the several statutes, ordinances, and acts, in the said recited act mentioned and specified, so far as the same relate to the ascertaining or establishing any standards of weights and measures, or to the establishing or recognizing certain differences between weights and measures of the same denominations, shall, from and after the first day of May, 1825, be repealed; and whereas it hath been found that further time is necessarily required before the said act can be conveniently carried into effect: it is enacted, "that the several clauses in the said act contained, the operation whereof is by the said act directed and appointed to commence and take effect from and after the first day of May, 1825, shall commence and take effect on the first day of January, 1826, and not sooner; and that such matters and things as are by the said act required to be done within three calendar months, or within six calendar months respectively next after the passing of the said act, shall and may be lawfully done at any time before the expiration of the three calendar months, or six calendar months respectively, after the first day of May, 1825; and that the several statutes, ordinances, and acts, and parts of statutes, ordinances, and acts, which by the said recited act are repealed from and after the first day of May, 1825, shall remain and continue in force until the said first day of January, 1826, and no longer, and shall, from and after the said first day of January, 1826, be repealed to all intents and purposes, as if the said first day of January, 1826, had been mentioned and specified in the said recited act, instead of the said first day of May, 1825, the said recited act, or any clause, matter, or thing in the same contained to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding."

(a) See the 6 Geo. IV. c. 12, infra. (b) See the cases, post, p. 1005.

Sec. 2. "And whereas, by the above-recited act, the figure of the standard bushel measure directed to be used for the sale of coals, culm, fish, potatoes, and fruit, is fixed and determined: and whereas it is expedient that the figure of all other measures used for the sale of coals, and all other goods and things commonly sold by heaped measure, should also be fixed and determined: be it therefore enacted, that from and after the first day of January, 1826, all such measures shall be made cylindrical, and the diameter of such measures shall be at the least double the depth thereof, and the height of the cone or heap shall be equal to three-fourths of the depth of the said measure, the outside of the measure being the extremity or base of such cone."

Before the passing of the 5 Geo. IV. c. 74, no other weight or measure could properly be used but that sanctioned by the statutes repealed by that act; and it was illegal to sell corn by any other measure than the Winchester measure, of eight gallons to the bushel. R. v. Major, 4 T. R. 750. And the buyer of corn by any other than the Winchester measure was subject to the penalty of 40s., in addition to the value of the corn so bought, by the 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 12. R. v. Arnold, 5 T. R. 353; Nolan, 281, S. C.; and see Tyson v. Thomas, 1 McClell. & Y. 119, in which it was held that a contract for the sale of corn by the hobbet was in contravention of the provisions of the 22 Car. II. c. 3, s. 2; and therefore an action could not lie for the breach of it.

And where the reddendum in a hospital renewed lease was so many quarters of corn, it was held, that it ought to be understood to mean legal quarters, reckoning the bushel at eight gallons, although the old leases, before the statute of 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 12, contained the same reddendum, and although till lately the lessees paid by composition, reckoning the bushel at nine gallons. Hospital of St. Cross v. Howard de Walden, 6 T. R. 338.

So, also, in the case of Noble v. Durrell, it was determined that a custom in a particular market town (Bridgnorth), that butter should weigh eighteen ounces to the pound, was bad. But Lord Kenyon, C. J., said, "that he did not mean, in deciding that question, that a custom to sell butter in lumps of any number of ounces was not good." And Buller, J., said, "that this question did not interfere with the question, whether to sell butter in lumps of any particular weight, is good or not. That he had not seen any act which required persons not to sell more or less than a pound; but the question there is, when a person is selling under the specific denomination of a pound, shall he be compellable to sell more than a pound?" 3 T. R. 271.

But, since the 5 Geo. IV. c. 74, a sale may be effected by any local weight or measure, if the ratio of such weight or measure to the standard weight or measure be specified in terms. Tyson v. Thomas, 1 M'Clel. & Y. 128.

In the case of Watts v. Friend, tried at Maidstone, 11th of August, 1828, before Lord Tenterden, the declaration was an assumpsit for non-delivery of seed of turnips. It appeared that the contract was made verbally, for the sale of the seed whilst the turnips were growing. And the sale was by the strike, and by Winchester measure, although the parties knew that the imperial standard was the lawful measure. Lord Tenterden observed, "that parties must, since the 5 Geo. IV. c. 74, s. 15, (ante, 1004) virtually contract to sell by the imperial measure, and if not, they must, in and by the very words of their contract, state the terms of their bargain, for otherwise the provisions of the act would be avoided, and that it was therefore questionable whether the parties could, upon the parol contract, recover; and the point was reserved." Chit. Col. Stat. 1107.

II. Provisions as to Standards, &c. in Towns, &c.

By different statutes (14 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 12; 31 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 2; 12 Hen. VII. c. 5; now repealed by 5 Geo. IV. c. 74, s. 23), directions were given for sending measures, according to the standard in the Exchequer, into the different parts of the kingdom.

By the 5 Geo. IV. c. 74, s. 11, it is enacted, "that copies and models of each of the standard yard, the said standard pound, the said standard gallon, and the said standard for heaped measure, and of such parts and multiples thereof, respectively, as the lord high treasurer of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or the said commissioners of his majesty's treasury, or any three of them, for the time being, shall judge expedient, shall, within three calendar months next after the passing of this act, be carefully made and verified under the direction of the said lord high treasurer, or the said commissioners of his majesty's treasury, or any three of them, for the time being; and that the copies and models of the said standard yard, of the said standard pound, of the said standard gallon, and of the said standard for heaped measure, and of parts and multiples thereof, so forthwith to be made and verified as aforesaid, shall, within three calendar months after the passing of this act, be deposited in the office of the chamberlains of the Exchequer at Westminster, and that copies thereof, verified as aforesaid, shall be sent to the lord mayor of London and the chief magistrate of Edinburgh and Dublin, and of such other cities and places, and to such other places and persons in his majesty's dominions or elsewhere, as the lord high treasurer or commissioners of the treasurer may from time to time direct."

Sect. 12 "That his majesty's justices of the peace in every county, riding, or division in England or Ireland, or shire or stewartry in Scotland, and the magistrates in every city, town, or place (being a county within itself) in England or Ireland, and in every city or royal burgh in Scotland, shall, within six calendar months after the passing of this act, purchase for their respective counties, ridings, or divisions, shires or stewartries, cities, towns, or places, or cities or royal burghs, a model and copy of each of the aforesaid standards of length, weight, measure, and of each of the parts and multiples thereof; which models and copies, when so purchased, shall be compared and verified with the models and copies deposited with the chamberlains of the Exchequer as aforesaid, in such manner as aforesaid, and upon payment of such fees as are at present payable to the said chamberlains upon the comparison and verification of weights and measures with the standards thereof; and such models and copies, when so compared and verified, shall be placed for custody and inspection with such person or persons, and in such place or places, as the said justices and magistrates, in their respective counties, ridings, and divisions, and shires or stewardries, cities, towns, and places, or cities or royal burghs, shall appoint, and the same shall be produced by the keeper or keepers thereof, upon reasonable notice, at such time or times and place or places, within each such county, riding, or division, shire, or stewardry, city, town, or place, or city or royal burgh, as any person or persons shall, by writing under his or their hand or hands, require; the person requiring such production paying the reasonable charges of the same."

Sect. 13. "That the expense of procuring and transmitting such models and copies for the respective counties, ridings, or divisions, cities, towns, or places, shall be paid, in that part of the said United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland called England, out of the rates payable in such counties, ridings, or divisions, cities, towns, or places; and in that part of the said United Kingdom called Scotland, such expenses in the respective shires and stewardries, and cities or royal burghs, shall be assessed by the commissioners of supply upon such shires and stewardries, and upon cities or royal burghs, by the magistrates thereof, and shall be paid along with the land-tax payable in such shires or stewardries, and cities or royal burghs, to the collectors of the land-tax in such shires or stewardries, and cities or royal burghs, respectively; and, in Ireland, such expenses shall be paid in the respective counties, and counties of cities and counties of towns, by presentments to be made by grand juries; and the collectors of such county rates in England, of land-tax in Scotland, and of the assessments under grand jury presentments in Ireland, shall have such and the same powers of levying and recovering the assessments to be made under this act, as are competent to them, for levying and recovering the said county rates, land-tax, and grand-jury assessments, respectively; and the said collectors respectively shall, out of the proceeds of such assessments, pay the expenses of procuring and transmitting such models and copies as aforesaid accordingly."

Sect. 14. "Provided, that in all cases of dispute respecting the correctness of any measure of capacity, arising in a place where recourse cannot be conveniently had to any of the aforesaid verified copies or models of the standard measures of capacity, or parts or multiples of the same, it shall and may be lawful to and for any justice of the peace, or magistrate, having jurisdiction in such place, to ascertain the content of such measure of capacity by direct reference to the weight of pure or rain water which such measure is capable of containing; ten pounds avoirdupois weight of such water, at the temperature of sixty-two degrees by Fahrenheit's thermometer, being the standard gallon ascertained by this act, the same being in bulk equal to two hundred and seventy-seven cubic inches, and two hundred and seventy-four one-thousandth parts of a cubic inch, and so in proportion for all parts and multiples of a gallon."

Sect. 17, "for the purposes of ascertaining and fixing the payments to be made in consequence of all existing contracts or rents in England and Ireland, payable in grain or malt, or in any other commodity or thing, and in consequence of any toll or rate heretofore payable, according to the weights and measures heretofore in use;" enacts, "that at the general or quarter sessions of the peace to be holden in every county, riding, or division, and in every city, town, or place (being a county of itself) in England or Ireland, next after the expiration of six calendar months after the passing of this act, or at any general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden thereafter, an inquisition shall be taken before the justices assembled at such general or quarter sessions, by the oaths of twelve substantial freeholders of the said respective counties, cities, towns, or places, having lands or tenements to the value of 100*l.* per annum or upwards, to be summoned by the sheriff or proper officer of every such county, city, town, or place, to inquire into and ascertain the amount, according to the standard of weight or measure by this act established, of all contracts or rents payable in grain or malt, or any other commodity or thing, or with reference to the measure or weight of any such grain, malt, or other commodity or thing, and the amount of any toll or rate heretofore payable according to any weights and measures heretofore in use within such counties, cities, towns, or places,

Sect. 19. "That, as soon as conveniently may be after such inquisitions shall have been made and enrolled in England, Ireland, and Scotland, respectively, accurate tables shall be prepared and published, under the authority of the said commissioners of his majesty's treasury, showing the proportions between the weights and measures heretofore in use, as mentioned in such inquisitions, and the weights and measures hereby established, with such other conversions of weights or measures as the said commissioners of his majesty's treasury may deem to be necessary; and after the publication of such tables, all future payments to be made shall be regulated according to such tables."

excise, &c.

Sect. 20. "And whereas the weights and measures by which the rates and duties of the customs and excise, and other his majesty's revenue, have been heretofore collected, are different from the weights and measures of the same denominations directed by this act to be universally used: and whereas the alteration of such weights and measures may, without due care had therein, greatly affect his majesty's revenue, and tend to the diminishing of the same: for the prevention thereof, be it therefore enacted, that so soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this act, accurate tables shall be prepared and published, under the direction of the said commissioners of the treasury for the time being, in order that the several rates and duties of customs and excise, and other his majesty's revenue, may be adjusted and made payable according to the respective quantities of the legal standards directed by this act to be universally used; and that, from and after the said first day of May, 1825, (a) and the publication of such tables, the several rates and duties thereafter to be collected by any of the officers of his majesty's customs or excise, or other his majesty's revenue, shall be collected and taken according to the calculations in the tables to be prepared as aforesaid."

It should also be noticed, that the 5 Geo. IV. c. 55, s. 9, provides that tables of weights and measures shall be constructed under the directions of the treasury, by which the duties, &c. of customs and excise shall be uniformly collected throughout the United Kingdom. See Artis, Vol. II.

Sect. 25. "Provided, that from and after the passing of this act, (a) all tuns, pipes, tertians, hogsheads, or other vessels of wine, oil, honey, and other gaugeable liquors, imported or brought into the port of the city of London, and landed within the said city and the liberties thereof, shall be subject and liable to be gauged, as heretofore hath been of right accustomed, by the lord mayor of the said city for the time being, by virtue of his office of gauger, or by his sufficient deputies, lawfully appointed, save and except that the contents of all such tuns, pipes, tertians, hogsheads, and other vessels, shall and may be ascertained by the standard measure of capacity for liquids directed by this act, and the multiples thereof; and that all such pipes, tuns, tertians, hogsheads, or other vessels that shall be found wanting of the true contents which such tuns, pipes, tertians, hogsheads, or other vessels ought to be of, to be ascertained as aforesaid, together with the wine and other liquids therein contained, shall be subject and liable to the like seizures and forfeitures as is or are provided by any act or acts of Parliament heretofore made for ascertaining the true contents of tuns, pipes, tertians, hogsheads, and other vessels of wine, oil, honey, and other gaugeable liquors; and that the moieties of such forfeitures due to his majesty, his heirs and successors, shall be, in like manner as heretofore hath been accustomed, accounted for by the lord mayor, for the time being, as such gauger, and his deputies, to his majesty, his heirs, and successors, in his and their Court of Exchequer at Westminster."

Sect. 26. "Provided also, that this act, or anything herein contained, shall not extend to prohibit, defeat, injure, or lessen the right of the mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city of London, or of the lord mayor of the said city for the time being, of, in, to, or concerning the office of gauger of wines, oils, honey, and other gaugeable liquors imported and landed within the city of London and the liberties thereof."

III. Provisions as to Examination of Weights and Measures.

By the 35 Geo. III. c. 102, s. 3, it is enacted, "that if any person shall wilfully obstruct, hinder, resist, or in anywise oppose, any of the persons hereby authorized and empowered to view and examine such weights and balances in the execution of his office, or if any person selling or retailing by weight shall refuse to produce his or her weights and balances in order to be viewed and examined, he or she who shall so offend, shall, for every such offence, on being duly convicted on oath, before any one or more justices of the peace, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 40s., nor less than 5s., as the justice or justices before whom any such offender shall be convicted shall adjudge; and such forfeiture or penalty shall be levied and applied as hereinbefore directed."

Sect. 4. "That it shall and may be lawful to and for the justices, at their said quarter-sessions, to allow to such person or persons, who shall be appointed to examine weights and balances under this act, a reasonable recompense or satisfaction for their trouble in the execution of the said office, such recompense or satisfaction to be paid to such person or persons out of the general county rate."

Sect. 5. "Provided, that any person or persons convicted of an offence under this act, and who shall suffer for the same under this act, shall not be otherwise punished for such offence by virtue of any other law or statute of this realm."

Sect. 6. "Provided also, that this act, or anything herein contained, shall not extend, or be construed to extend, to lessen or prevent the authority which any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, or any person appointed at any court leet for any hundred or manor, may have or possess for the examining, regulating, seizing, breaking, or destroying any weights or balances within their respective jurisdictions, but that he, she, and they, shall and may have and possess the same power and authority therein as if this act had not been made."

Sect. 7. And, for the more effectually carrying this act into execution, it is enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful to and for the said justices, and they are hereby empowered and required, as soon after the passing of this act as may be convenient, to purchase, or cause to be purchased, for the use of their respective counties, ridings, or divisions, out of the general county rate, proper weights according to the standard in the Exchequer; which shall be deposited for the inspection of all persons, either with the respective clerks of the peace, or with some proper person, in such safe and convenient place or places, within their respective counties, ridings, or divisions, as the said justices shall direct; and shall be produced by the person or persons in whose custody the same shall be lodged (upon reasonable notice), at such time and place as any person or persons shall, by writing under their respective hands, require and appoint; the person or persons so requiring the production of the said weights paying the reasonable costs and charges of producing the same."

Sect. 8. "Provided also, that no person or persons shall be prosecuted for any offence against this act, unless information thereof, upon oath, shall have been given to some justice of the peace within one month after the offence committed."

Sect. 9 makes it a public act.

The 37 Geo. III. c. 143, s. 1, repeals so much of the 35 Geo. III. c. 102, as requires the justices, at the quarter-sessions of the peace, to appoint persons to examine the weights and balances within their respective counties, &c., and which authorizes the persons so appointed to search for and examine all weights and balances, and to seize and destroy false or unequal weights or balances, and imposes a penalty on the persons in whose possession the same shall be found; and enacts, "that it shall and may be lawful to and for the justices of the peace, at their respective petty sessions, within the divisions, districts, and other places of the several counties in England and Wales, to appoint one or more person or persons, who shall have power to examine the weights and balances within such divisions, districts, and other places respectively."

It should be observed, that this statute must be construed so as to have been capable of being carried into immediate effect when it passed, and at which time the justices in petty sessions could appoint the examiners of weights and balances only for such divisions and districts as were then known and recognized; they cannot now subdivide such districts, and appoint distinct officers; where a rule therefore was obtained for a mandamus, calling upon the justices of the county to allow a compensation out of the county rate to an examiner of weights and measures so illegally appointed, it was discharged with costs. R. v. Justices of Devon, 1 B. & A. 588.

Sect. 2. "That it shall and may be lawful to and for the person or persons so to be appointed as aforesaid, and they are hereby required (having first been sworn duly and faithfully to execute the office in him or them reposed by virtue of such appointment, and of this act, which oath such justices are hereby authorized and empowered to administer), as often as the said justices shall direct, in the day-time, to enter into the shop, mill, house, outhouses, and other premises near to such shop, mill, or house, and into the stall or standing-place of any person or persons who sell by retail and weight any wares, provisions, goods, or chattels whatsoever, and then and there to search for, view, and examine all weights and balances in such shop, mill, house, outhouses, premises, stall, or standing-place, and to seize any weight or weights, not being according to the versally used; and that, from and after the said first day of May, 1825, (a) and the publication of such tables, the several rates and duties thereafter to be collected by any of the officers of his majesty's customs or excise, or other his majesty's revenue, shall be collected and taken according to the calculations in the tables to be prepared as aforesaid."

It should also be noticed, that the 5 Geo. IV. c. 55, s. 9, provides that tables of weights and measures shall be constructed under the directions of the treasury, by which the duties, &c. of customs and excise shall be uniformly collected throughout the United Kingdom. See Excise, Vol. II.

Sect. 25. "Provided, that from and after the passing of this act, (a) all tuns, pipes, tertians, hogsheads, or other vessels of wine, oil, honey, and other gaugeable liquors, imported or brought into the port of the city of London, and landed within the said city and the liberties thereof, shall be subject and liable to be gauged, as heretofore hath been of right accustomed, by the lord mayor of the said city for the time being, by virtue of his office of gauger, or by his sufficient deputies, lawfully appointed, save and except that the contents of all such tuns, pipes, tertians, hogsheads, and other vessels, shall and may be ascertained by the standard measure of capacity for liquids directed by this act, and the multiples thereof; and that all such pipes, tuns, tertians, hogsheads, or other vessels that shall be found wanting of the true contents which such tuns, pipes, tertians, hogsheads, or other vessels ought to be of, to be ascertained as aforesaid, together with the wine and other liquids therein contained, shall be subject and liable to the like seizures and forfeitures as is or are provided by any act or acts of Parliament heretofore made for ascertaining the true contents of tuns, pipes, tertians, hogsheads, and other vessels of wine, oil, honey, and other gaugeable liquors; and that the moiety of such forfeitures due to his majesty, his heirs and successors, shall be, in like manner as heretofore hath been accustomed, accounted for by the lord mayor, for the time being, as such gauger, and his deputies, to his majesty, his heirs, and successors, in his and their Court of Exchequer at Westminster."

Sect. 26. "Provided also, that this act, or anything herein contained, shall not extend to prohibit, defeat, injure, or lessen the right of the mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city of London, or of the lord mayor of the said city for the time being, of, in, to, or concerning the office of gauger of wines, oils, honey, and other gaugeable liquors imported and landed within the city of London and the liberties thereof."

III. Provisions as to Examination of Weights and Measures.

By the 35 Geo. III. c. 102, s. 3, it is enacted, "that if any person shall wilfully obstruct, hinder, resist, or in anywise oppose, any of the persons hereby authorized and empowered to view and examine such weights and balances in the execution of his office, or if any person selling or retailing by weight shall refuse to produce his or her weights and balances in order to be viewed and examined, he or she who shall so offend, shall, for every such offence, on being duly convicted on oath, before any one or more justices of the peace, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 40s., nor less than 5s., as the justice or justices before whom any such offender shall be convicted shall adjudge; and such forfeiture or penalty shall be levied and applied as hereinbefore directed."

Sect. 4. "That it shall and may be lawful to and for the justices, at their aid quarter-sessions, to allow to such person or persons, who shall be appointed to examine weights and balances under this act, a reasonable recompense or satisfaction for their trouble in the execution of the said office, such recompense or satisfaction to be paid to such person or persons out of the general county rate."

Sect. 5. "Provided, that any person or persons convicted of an offence under this act, and who shall suffer for the same under this act, shall not be otherwise punished for such offence by virtue of any other law or statute of this realm."

Sect. 6. "Provided also, that this act, or anything herein contained, shall not extend, or be construed to extend, to lessen or prevent the authority which any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, or any person appointed at any court leet for any hundred or manor, may have or possess for the examining, regulating, seizing, breaking, or destroying any weights or balances within their respective jurisdictions, but that he, she, and they, shall and may have and possess the same power and authority therein as if this act had not been made."

Sect. 7. And, for the more effectually carrying this act into execution, it is enacted, "that it shall and may be lawful to and for the said justices, and they are hereby empowered and required, as soon after the passing of this act as may be convenient, to purchase, or cause to be purchased, for the use of their respective counties, ridings, or divisions, out of the general county rate, proper weights according to the standard in the Exchequer; which shall be deposited for the inspection of all persons, either with the respective clerks of the peace, or with some proper person, in such safe and convenient place or places, within their respective counties, ridings, or divisions, as the said justices shall direct; and shall be produced by the person or persons in whose custody the same shall be lodged (upon reasonable notice), at such time and place as any person or persons shall, by writing under their respective hands, require and appoint; the person or persons so requiring the production of the said weights paying the reasonable costs and charges of producing the same."

Sect. 8. "Provided also, that no person or persons shall be prosecuted for any offence against this act, unless information thereof, upon oath, shall have been given to some justice of the peace within one month after the offence committed."

Sect. 9 makes it a public act.

The 37 Geo. III. c. 143, s. 1, repeals so much of the 35 Geo. III. c. 102, as requires the justices, at the quarter-sessions of the peace, to appoint persons to examine the weights and balances within their respective counties, &c., and which authorizes the persons so appointed to search for and examine all weights and balances, and to seize and destroy false or unequal weights or balances, and imposes a penalty on the persons in whose possession the same shall be found; and enacts, "that it shall and may be lawful to and for the justices of the peace, at their respective petty sessions, within the divisions, districts, and other places of the several counties in England and Wales, to appoint one or more person or persons, who shall have power to examine the weights and balances within such divisions, districts, and other places respectively."

It should be observed, that this statute must be construed so as to have been capable of being carried into immediate effect when it passed, and at which time the justices in petty sessions could appoint the examiners of weights and balances only for such divisions and districts as were then known and recognized; they cannot now subdivide such districts, and appoint distinct officers; where a rule therefore was obtained for a mandamus, calling upon the justices of the county to allow a compensation out of the county rate to an examiner of weights and measures so illegally appointed, it was discharged with costs. R. v. Justices of Devon, 1 B. & A. 588.

Sect. 2. "That it shall and may be lawful to and for the person or persons so to be appointed as aforesaid, and they are hereby required (having first been sworn duly and faithfully to execute the office in him or them reposed by virtue of such appointment, and of this act, which oath such justices are hereby authorized and empowered to administer), as often as the said justices shall direct, in the day-time, to enter into the shop, mill, house, outhouses, and other premises near to such shop, mill, or house, and into the stall or standing-place of any person or persons who sell by retail and weight any wares, provisions, goods, or chattels whatsoever, and then and there to search for, view, and examine the weights and balances in such shop, mill, house, outhouses, premises, stall, or standing-place, and to seize any weight or weights, not being according to the standard in the Exchequer, or any false or unequal balance or balances, which shall, upon such search, be found therein, and to detain the same, to be produced before the justices in petty sessions as aforesaid, upon the hearing of the information or informations hereinafter mentioned; and the person or persons, in whose shop, mill, house, outhouses, premises, stall, or standing-place, any such defective weight or weights, or any such false or unequal balance or balances, shall be found (against whom for such offence or offences an information or informations is and are hereby directed to be preferred), shall, upon conviction thereof in petty sessions as aforesaid, upon view or confession, or upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, forfeit and pay, for every such offence, any sum of money not exceeding 20s., nor less than 5s., as the said justices, before whom such person or persons shall have been convicted, shall in their discretion order and adjudge, together with the costs and charges attending such conviction; such forfeiture, together with such costs and charges, to be levied by warrant under the hands and seals of the said justices, by distress and sale of so much of the goods and chattels of the person or persons offending, as shall be sufficient to pay the said penalty, and also the expenses of making such distress and sale."

Sect. 3. "That, on the conviction of such offender or offenders, the said justices shall cause such defective weight or weights, or such false or unequal balance or balances, so produced before them, to be forthwith broken and rendered useless, and the materials thereof to be sold, and the money arising from such sale, together with the amount of the forfeiture or forfeitures, to be paid by them to the treasurer of such county, riding, or division, to be by him applied towards the expenses of carrying the said recited act and this act into execution, and the residue (if any) on account of the public stock of such county, riding, or division; and the said justices shall also prepare, or cause to be prepared, returns of the forfeitures levied by them in pursuance of the said before-recited act, and of this act, and also of the sums arising from the sale of such defective weights, and false and unequal balances, and shall transmit such returns, signed by them, to the clerk of the peace for such county, riding, or division respectively, at every general quarter-sessions of the peace to be held for such county, riding, or division."

Sect. 4. "Provided, that if the majority of the inhabitants of any parish, township, or place within such county, riding, or division, should be desirous that any person or persons shall be specially appointed to examine the weights and balances within such parish, township, or place, it shall and may be lawful for such inhabitants, and they are hereby empowered (at a vestry to be duly holden for that purpose) to nominate one or more substantial householder or householders, to be approved of and appointed by the said justices, at their respective petty sessions for the division or district wherein such parish, township, or place shall lie; which person or persons so nominated, approved, and appointed, shall have the same powers and authorities within such parish, township, or place, as are vested in the person or persons appointed for any district, division, or place respectively."

Sect. 5. "Provided, that no appointment for such parish, township, or place shall be made, until the inhabitants thereof have procured, or caused to be procured, the proper weights, according to the standard in the Exchequer, for the use of such parish, township, or place, to be deposited in the custody of the person or persons appointed as last mentioned; and that it shall and may be lawful for the said justices, in their respective petty sessions, to order and direct the costs and charges of procuring such weights, and the recompense and satisfaction to be allowed to such person or persons, for his or their time and trouble in the execution of such office, within such parish, township, or place, to be paid out of the rate made for the relief of the poor, within such parish, township, or place."

inflicted in respect of any offence, save and except only the punishment of publicly or privately whipping on female offenders, in manner as hereinbefore is enacted."

Wife.

When criminally liable for serious
offences.

A WIFE, or feme covert, is so much favoured in respect of that power and authority which her husband has over her, that she shall not suffer any punishment for committing a bare theft in company with or by coercion of her husband. 1 Haw. c. 1, s. 2.

But if she commit a theft of her own voluntary act, or by the bare command of her husband, or be guilty of treason, murder, or robbery, in company with, or by coercion of her husband, she is punishable as much as if she were sole, because of the odiousness and dangerous consequences of these crimes. 1 Haw. c. 1, s. 9; 1 Hale, 47; Dalt. c. 157.

And the coercion of the husband is only a presumption till the contrary appear; for if, upon the evidence, it can clearly appear that the wife was not drawn to it by the husband, but that she was the principal actor and inciter of it, she seems to be guilty as well as the husband. 1 Hale, 516.

Where a wife, by the incitement of her husband, but in his absence, knowingly uttered a forged order and certificate for the receiving of prize-money, it was holden by the Court of King's Bench that they might be indicted together: the wife as principal, on the 49 Geo. III. c. 123; and the husband as an accessory before the fact, at common law. Morris's case, 2 Leach, 1096; 1 Russ. 18; R. & R., C. C. 270.

Upon a joint charge against husband and wife of receiving stolen goods, the wife cannot properly be convicted, if the husband is. R. v. Archer, R. & M., C. C. 143.

In R. v. Martha Hughes, 1 Russ. 18, the question of the coercion of a husband upon a wife, in the offence of forgery, came under the consideration of Thompson, B. The prisoner, Martha Hughes, was indicted for forging and uttering Bank of England notes. The principal witness stated, that, in consequence of a conversation which he had had some time before with the prisoner's husband, he went to the husband's shop; that the husband was not present, but that he saw the prisoner, who beckoned him to go into an inner room; that she followed him into the room, and that he there told her what her husband had said to him; upon which they agreed about the business, and he bought of her three 2*l.* notes, at 1*l.* 4*s.* each; that he paid her for the notes, and was to receive 8*s.* in change. He further stated, that when he was putting the notes into his pocket-book, and before he had received the change, the husband looked into the room, but did not come in, or interfere in the business, further than by saying, "Get on with you." After this, the witness and prisoner returned into the shop, where the husband was; the prisoner gave him the change, and both the prisoner and her husband cautioned him to be careful. Upon this evidence, the counsel for the prisoner objected, that she acted under the coercion of her husband; that the evidence would have been sufficient to have convicted the husband, if both the husband and wife had been on their trial; and, therefore, that the prisoner ought to be acquitted. He referred to 2 East's P. C. 559; 1 Hale, 46; Kel. 37. Thompson, B., stopped the counsel for the prosecution, saying, "I am very clear as to the law on this point. The law, out of tenderness to the wife, if a felony be committed in the presence of the husband, raises a presumption primâ facie, and primâ facie only, as is clearly laid down by Lord Hale (1 Hale, 516), that it was done under his coercion; but it is absolutely necessary that the husband should in such case be actually present, and taking a part in the transaction. Here it is entirely the act of the wife. It is, indeed, in consequence of a communication previously with the husband, that the witness applies to the wife; but she is ready to deal, and has on her person the articles, which she delivers to the witness. There was a putting off before the husband came; and it was sufficient if, before that time, she did that which was necessary to complete the crime. The coercion must be at the time of the act done, and then the law, out of tenderness, refers it prima facie to the coercion of the husband. But when the crime has been completed in his absence, no subsequent act of his (although it might possibly make him an accessory to the felony of the wife) can be referred to what was done in his absence."

Wife when criminally liable.

But where the wife is to be considered merely as the servant of the husband, she will not be answerable for the consequences of his breach of duty, however fatal, though she may be privy to his conduct. Charles Squire, and Hannah, his wife, were indicted for the murder of a boy, who was bound as a parish apprentice to the prisoner Charles; and it appeared in evidence that both the prisoners had used the apprentice in a most cruel and barbarous manner, and that the wife had occasionally committed the cruelties in the absence of the husband. But the surgeon who opened the body, deposed, that in his judgment the boy died from debility and want of proper food and nourishment, and not from the wounds, &c., which he had received. Upon which, Lawrence, J., directed the jury, that as the wife was the servant of the husband, it was not her duty to provide the apprentice with sufficient food and nourishment, and that she was not guilty of any breach of duty in neglecting to do so; though, if the husband had allowed her sufficient food for the apprentice, and she had wilfully witholden it from him, then she would have been guilty. But that here the fact was otherwise; and, therefore, though in foro conscientie the wife was equally guilty with her husband, yet, in point of law, she could not be said to be guilty of not providing the apprentice with sufficient food and nourishment. R. v. Squire and wife, Stafford Lent Assizes, 1799; 1 Russ. 16.

Where wife a mere servant.

A wife shall not be deemed accessory to a felony for receiving her husband who has been guilty of it, as her husband shall be for receiving her; because she is under the power of her husband, and she is bound to receive him. 1 How. c. 1, s. 10; 1 Hale, 47.

When not an accessory.

But a wife may be indicted together with her husband, and punished with him, for inferior misdemeanors, as keeping a bawdy-house; for this is an offence as to the government of the house, in which the wife has a principal share; and also such an offence as may generally be presumed to be managed by the intrigues of her sex. 1 How. c. 1, s. 12.

Offences not capital.

So, she may be indicted for keeping a gaming-house. R. v. Dixon, 10 Mod. 335.

And generally a married woman shall answer as much as if she were sole for an offence, not capital, against the common law or statute; and if it be of such a nature that it may be committed by her alone, without the concurrence of her husband, she may be punished for it, without the husband, by way of indictment; which being a proceeding grounded merely on the breach of the law, the husband shall not be included in it for an offence to which he is no way privy. But if a wife incur the forfeiture of a penal statute, the husband may be made a party to an action or information for the same (as he may generally to any suit for a cause of action given by his wife), and shall be liable to answer what shall be recovered thereupon. 1 How. c. 1, s. 13.

Penal statute.

A married woman by her own act (but not in respect of what is done by others at her command, because all such commands of hers are void) may commit a forcible entry or detainer; and upon the justice's view of the force, she shall be imprisoned therefore, and she may be fined in such case: but such fine, set upon the wife, shall not be levied upon the husband; for the husband shall never be charged for the act or default of his wife but when he is made a party to the action, and judgment given against him and his wife. Dalt. c. 126; 9 Rep. 72; 11 Rep. 61.

Forcible entry.

Likewise, if she shall commit any riot, or do any trespass or other wrong, she is punishable for it; and for a trespass done by the wife, or for a scandal published by her, the action lieth against both the husband and wife, and there the husband is chargeable to the damages or fine, because he is party to the action and judgment. But if a wife, without her husband, be indicted of a trespass, riot, or any other wrong, there the wife shall answer and be party to the judgment only; and in such case, the fine set upon the wife shall not be levied upon the husband; yet, after the husband's death, such damages or fines shall then be levied of the wife herself; and as for imprisonment, or other corporal pain, it shall be inflicted upon the wife only, and not upon the husband for his wife's act or default. Dalt. c. 139.

Receiving stolen goods.

If a woman receive stolen goods into her house, knowing them so to be, or lock them up in her chest or chamber, her husband not knowing thereof; if her husband, so soon as he knoweth thereof, do forthwith forsake his house and her company, and make his abode elsewhere, he shall not be charged for her offence; whereas otherwise the law will impute the fault to him, and not to her. Dalt. c. 157.

Conspiracy.

A prosecution for conspiracy is not maintainable against a husband and wife only; because they are esteemed but as one person in law, and are presumed to have but one will. 1 Haw. c. 72, s. 8.

Carrying her away with the husband's goods.

If any man take another man's wife, with her husband's goods, against the husband's will, this is felony. Dalt. c. 157. See as to Abduction, Vol. I.

Wife taking the husband's goods.

But a wife herself cannot feloniously take her husband's goods; and though she take her husband's goods, and deliver them to a stranger, yet it is no felony in the stranger. Hale's Sum. 65; 1 Haw. c. 33, s. 19.

But she may be guilty of felony in taking her husband's goods from the possession of another party.

And if the wife steal the goods of her husband, and deliver them to B., who, knowing it, carries them away, B., being the adulterer of the wife, this would be felony in B.; for, in such case, no consent of the husband can be presumed. Dalt. c. 157; 1 Russ. 19.

Woman servant marrying.

If a woman, who is a servant, shall marry, yet she must serve out her time, and the husband cannot take her out of her master's service. Dalt. c. 53. See Servants, ante, p. 362.

Wife hiring to be a servant.

Also, if a married man and his wife do bind themselves to serve, they shall be compelled to serve according to their covenant or agreement. Dalt. c. 58.

Laying property in wife.

If a married woman live apart from her husband, upon an income arising from property vested in trustees for her separate use, a house that she has hired to live in is properly described as the dwelling-house of her husband, though he had never been in it, and she paid the rent out of her separate property. R. v. French, R. & R., C. C. 491.

And if a wife be living apart from her husband, in a house built by him, though she be living in adultery with another man, who paid the housekeeping expenses, it may be laid as the dwelling-house of the husband; even if the husband suspected the criminal intercourse, when he placed her to live in the house. R. v. Wilford, R. & R., C. C. 517.

Evidence of wife.

Husband and wife cannot be witnesses for one another; nor regularly against one another. 2 Haw. c. 46, s. 16. See Evidence, Vol. II, p. 66, 67.

Surety for the peace against husband.

But a wife may demand surety of the peace against her husband, threatening to beat her outrageously; and a husband also may have it against his wife. 1 Haw. c. 60, s. 4.

And in other criminal cases, the wife may be a witness against her husband, where she is the party grieved; but not in civil cases. Dalt. c. 164.

R. v. Earl Ferrers, 1 Burr. 631. An habeas corpus was issued, commanding Laurence Earl Ferrers to bring up the body of his countess, that she might receive the protection of the court against the said earl, and swear the peace against him if she should think proper. The earl disobeying the writ of habeas corpus, an attachment was granted against him. Upon which, he permitted her to come into court, and she exhibited articles of the peace against him. And the earl was obliged to enter into recognizance accordingly, himself in 5000*l.*, and two sureties in 2500*l.* each.

And a recognizance to the same effect has been entered into by a peer of the realm, within a recent date.

Husband and wife agreeing to live separate.

R. v. Mary Mead, 1 Burr. 342. An habeas corpus having issued at the instance of John Wilkes, Esq., to bring up the body of Mary Wilkes, wife of the said John Wilkes, and daughter of the said Mary Mead; Mrs. Mead now brought her into court. The substance of the return was, that her husband (having used her very ill) did, in consideration of a great sum which she gave him out of her separate estate, consent to her living alone, executed articles of separation, and covenanted (under a large penalty) never to disturb her, or any person with whom she should live; that she lived with her mother, at her own earnest desire; and that the writ of habeas corpus was taken out with a view of seizing her by force, or some other bad purpose. The court held this to be a formal renunciation by the husband of his marital right to seize her, or force her back to live with him. And they said, that any attempt of the husband to seize her by force and violence would be a breach of the peace. They also declared, that any attempt made by the husband to molest her in her present return from Westminster Hall, would be a contempt of the court; and they told the lady that she was at full liberty to go where and to whom she pleased.

Cannot be bound by recognizance.

Publicly selling or buying a wife is clearly an indictable offence. R. v. Delasalle, 3 Burr. 1438. And many prosecutions against husbands for selling, and others for buying, have recently been sustained, and imprisonment for six months inflicted. See form of indictment, infra.

Selling a wife.

As to the liability of a husband for his wife's debts, see Chit. Jun. Contr. 38 to 50; Bac. Ab. Baron and Feme (K.); Com. Dig. Baron and Feme; 1 Chit. Pl. 22. A treatise on such a subject does not fall within the compass of this work.

Pretending to

BY the 9 Geo. II. c. 5, s. 3, it is enacted, "That no prosecution, suit, or proceeding, shall be commenced or carried on against any person or persons for witchcraft, sorcery, enchantment, or conjuration, or for charging another with any such offence, in any court whatsoever in Great Britain."

Sect. 4. "And, for the more effectual preventing and punishing any pretences to such arts or powers as are before mentioned, whereby ignorant persons are frequently deluded and defrauded," it is further enacted, "that if any person shall pretend to exercise or use any kind of witchcraft, sorcery, enchantment, or conjuration, or undertake to tell fortunes, or pretend from his or her skill or knowledge in any occult or crafty science to discover where or in what manner any goods or chattels, supposed to have been stolen or lost, may be found, every person so offending, being thereof lawfully convicted on indictment or information in that part of Great Britain called England, or on indictment or libel in that part of Great Britain called Scotland, shall for every such offence suffer imprisonment by the space of one year, without bail or mainprize, and once in every quarter of the said year in some market-town of the proper county, upon the market day, there stand openly on the pillory (a) by the space of one hour, and also shall (if the court by which such judgment shall be given shall think fit) be obliged to give sureties for his or her good behaviour, in such sum, and for such time, as the said court shall judge proper, according to the circumstances of the offence, and in such case shall be further imprisoned until such sureties be given."

The judgment against a woman, in case of high treason, was not the same as against a man traitor, to be hanged, cut down alive, have the bowels taken out, and the body quartered; but it was, to be drawn to the place of execution, and there burned. Judgment in treason and felony.

And this, also, was the judgment against a woman in case of petit treason;

III. c. 48, the first section of which enacts that women, convicted of high treason or petit treason, shall not be burned, but shall be drawn to the place of execution, and be there hanged. In case of felony, the judgment is the same against both man and woman, to be hanged by the neck till dead. 2 Haw. c. 48, s. 7.
Plea of pregnancy.	If it is clear, that if a woman quick with child be condemned either for treason or felony, she may allege her being with child in order to get the execution respited, and thereupon the sheriff shall be commanded to take her into a private room, and to impanel a jury of matrons, to try and examine whether she be quick with child or not; and, if they find her quick with child, the execution shall be respited till her delivery. 52 Geo. 3, c. 72. Alice Holt forest.	By the 52 Geo. III. c. 72, the king is allowed to inclose not exceeding 1600 acres of land in the forest of Alice Holt, in the county of Southampton.
Damaging trees in forest.	Sect. 6. "And, for the better preservation of the trees, woods, underwoods, heritors, and standils growing, or which may hereafter be planted and nourished to grow or be growing in or upon any part of the said inclosures so to be made in pursuance of this act, as well before as after the same shall be inclosed, be it further enacted, That all persons whomsoever who shall, from and after the passing of this act, unlawfully cut down, split, bark, peel, damage, deface, destroy, or carry away any timber tree or other tree, woods, or covert, green stick, or any heritor or standil within the said forest as aforesaid, shall be subject and liable to all such pains, penalties, and punishments, as are provided by the laws and statutes of this realm to be given, imposed, or inflicted upon any person or persons committing the like offence or offences in the lands, grounds, woods, or coppices, being inclosed, and the private property of any of his majesty's subjects."
Penalties.
Breaking down inclosures.	Sect. 7. "That every person who shall wilfully destroy or take away, or shall break down any fence or inclosure, or any part thereof, made for the protection of any nursery of wood and timber as aforesaid, shall for the first offence forfeit the sum of 10*l.*; and for the second offence the sum of 20*l.*; and for the third offence shall be deemed guilty of felony, and may be transported to any part beyond the seas for the term of seven years, or be subject to such other punishment by fine, imprisonment, or otherwise, as the court before which such person shall be convicted may direct; and such penalties shall and may be recovered, and on non-payment thereof the person who shall forfeit the same may be committed to prison, in the manner and for the same periods as is specified in an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his present majesty, intituled, 'An Act for the better Preservation of Timber Trees, and of Woods and Underwoods, and for the further Preservation of Roots, Shrubs, and Plants,' in relation to the penalties of 20*l.* and 30*l.* respectively, for wilfully cutting or breaking down any timber under the said act."

And by the 52 Geo. III. c. 71, similar provisions are enacted respecting the forest of Woolmer, in the county of Southampton, where the king is allowed to inclose 2000 acres.

By the 50 Geo. III. c. 77, and 52 Geo. III. c. 117, certain duties of customs are imposed upon wood imported, and regulations enacted relating thereto.

The 52 Geo. III. c. 71, contains provisions respecting the forest of Woolmer, and the timber growing there, and certain inclosures to be there made; and by sect. 7, "every person who shall wilfully destroy or take away, or shall break down, any fence or inclosure, or any part thereof, made for the protection of any nursery of wood and timber as aforesaid, shall for the first offence forfeit the sum of 10*l.*; and for the second offence, the sum of 20*l.*; and for the third offence, shall be accounted guilty of felony, and may be transported to any part beyond the seas for the term of seven years, or be subject to such other punishment, by fine, imprisonment, or otherwise, as the court before which such person shall be convicted may direct; and such penalties shall and may be recovered, and on non-payment thereof, the person who shall forfeit the same may be committed to prison in the manner and for the same periods as are specified in an act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his present majesty, intituled, 'An Act for the better Preservation of Timber Trees, and of Woods and Underwoods, and for the further Preservation of Roots, Shrubs, and Plants,' in relation to the penalties of 20*l.* and 30*l.* respectively for wilfully cutting or breaking down any timber under the said act."

The General Inclosure Act, 41 Geo. III. (United Kingdom) c. 109, s. 28, (Vol. III., p. 307,) imposes a forfeiture not exceeding 5*l.* on any person who shall wilfully and unlawfully break down, destroy, carry away, or damage any fence, stile, post, rail, gate, bridge, or tunnel, put up under the authority and for the purposes of any inclosure act, upon conviction before a justice of the county, &c.

By the 29 Geo. II. c. 36, s. 1, it is enacted, "That it shall and may be lawful to and for his majesty, his heirs and successors, and all other owners of wastes, woods, and pastures, in that part of Great Britain called England, wherein any person or persons, or body or bodies politic or corporate, hath or have right of common or pasture, by and with the assent of the major part in number and value of the owners and occupiers of tenements to which the said right of common of pasture doth belong, and to and for the major part in number and value of the owners and occupiers of such tenements, by and with the assent of the owner or owners of the said wastes, woods, and pastures, and to and for any other person or persons, or body politic or corporate, by and with the assent and grant of the owner or owners of such wastes, woods, and pastures, and the major part in number and value of the owners and occupiers of such tenements, to inclose and keep in severalty, for the growth and preservation of timber or underwood, any part of such wastes, woods, and pastures, for such time, and in such manner, and upon such conditions, as shall be agreed by them respectively."

By the 31 Geo. II. c. 41, this word owners shall extend to tenants for life or and for term of years: provided, that nothing done by such tenants for life or years shall have effect or continuance after determination of such their estate.

Sect. 2. "Provided, that if any person or persons so suspected and apprehended as aforesaid, shall find him, her, or themselves aggrieved by any judgment or determination, which shall be given or made by any justice or justices of the peace, by virtue of this act, it shall and may be lawful to and for such person or persons so aggrieved (unless he, she, or they have twice before been

III. c. 23, s. 7, 8, if any inspector hath reason to suspect that any cloth shall be in the possession of any merchant, buyer, dresser, or cloth-worker, which hath not been truly stamped at the fulling-mill, he may give notice thereof to such person; describing the cloth by the maker's name or seal; which said person shall give two hours' notice to the said inspector of the time when he intends to put the said cloth into water, in order that he may attend the wetting and measuring thereof; and if such person shall put the same

By the 6 Geo. III. c. 23, s. 15, if any person shall stretch any cloth more than one yard (consisting of thirty-seven inches) in every twenty in the length, or more than one inch in twelve in the breadth, beyond the mark stamped by the searcher, inspector, or supervisor, who last measured the same, he shall forfeit for the first half-yard overstretched in length, 5*s*.; and for every quarter of a yard above such half-yard, 10*s*.; and for the first inch overstretched in breadth, 5*s*.; and for every inch above the first, 10*s*.

By the 5 Geo. III. c. 51, s. 11, the inspector or supervisor may, in the day-time, enter into any shops, outhouses, tenter-grounds, or warehouses, to search; and any person resisting or refusing to permit the same shall forfeit 10*l*.

Sec. 8. The supervisors shall be daily employed in visiting the mills, tenters, tenter-grounds, workshops, and places within their districts, and every such supervisor shall measure and stamp with a seal of lead having his name impressed on so many of the said cloths as he conveniently can; and keep an account thereof; and transmit the same, together with the accounts received by him from the searchers, to the justices at every quarter-sessions. And if any inspector or supervisor be negligent in his duty, or shall transmit a false account of the cloths measured, he shall forfeit and lose his office.

Sec. 9. And if the inspector or supervisor shall find any cloth, or end, or half-cloth, falsely stamped by the searcher, above one inch in breadth in more than one-third part of the length thereof, or above half-a-yard in length, he shall within seven days give information thereof to a justice not being a dealer, &c.; and such searcher shall, on conviction before such justice, forfeit 10*s*. Wreck. (a)

[3 Edw. I. c. 4; 17 Edw. II. st. 1, c. 11; 12 Anne, st. 2, c. 18; 3 Geo. I. c. 13; 2 Geo. II. c. 19; 48 Geo. III. c. 130; 49 Geo. III. c. 122; 53 Geo. III. c. 87; 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 7; 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 18, 19, 20; 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 24.]

Wreck, what.

WRECK of the sea, in legal understanding, is applied to such goods as after shipwreck at sea are by the sea cast upon the land; and therefore the jurisdiction thereof pertaineth not to the lord admiral, but to the common law. 2 Inst. 167.

Jetsam, flotsam, and ligan.

None of those goods which are called jetsam (from being cast into the sea while the ship is in danger, and which there sink and remain under water), or those called flotsam (from floating on the surface of the water), or those called ligan (which lie in the bottom of the sea, but tied to a cork or buoy, in order to be found again), are to be esteemed wreck, so long as they remain in or upon the sea, and are not cast upon the land by the sea; but if any of them are cast upon the land by the sea, they are wreck. 1 Bla. Com. 292.

(a) As to the burial of dead bodies cast on shore, see Bodies, Vol. I.

Also, by the 3 Edw. I. c. 4, where a man, a dog, or a cat, escape quick out of the ship, the ship, or anything therein, shall not be adjudged a wreck. Living creature escaping.

A man, a dog, or a cat—Which statute being but declaratory of the common law, these three instances are only put for examples; for, besides these two kinds of beasts, all other beasts, fowls, and other living things are understood, whereby the property of the goods may be known. 2 Inst. 167.

And it is now holden, that not only if any live thing escape, but if proof can be made of the property of any of the goods or lading which came on shore, they shall not be forfeited as wreck. 1 Bla. Com. 290. As in the case of Hamilton v. Davis, 5 Burr. 2732. The ship was lost. The goods cast on shore were sufficiently marked, so as that the owner might be known. But the lord of the manor refused to deliver them up, insisting that they were forfeited as wreck, because no living creature had come alive from the ship to the shore. By Lord Mansfield, C. J.—“No case hath been produced in the argument of this cause, to prove that the goods were forfeited, because no dog, or cat, or other animal came alive to shore. I will therefore presume, that there never was any such determination; and that no case could have been determined, so contrary to the principles of law, justice, and humanity. The very idea of it is shocking. And there is no ground for such a forfeiture, upon the distinction that hath been so much urged, between a man or other animal coming to shore alive or not alive. The coming to shore of a dog or a cat alive, can be no better proof, than if they should come ashore dead. The escaping alive makes no sort of difference. If the owner of the animal were known, the presumption of the goods belonging to the same person would be equally strong, whether the animal were living or not.” And the court were clear and unanimous that the owner was entitled to his goods again, on his paying or tendering a reasonable salvage. Goods cast on shore.

By the 17 Edw. II. st. 1, c. 11, the king shall have wreck of the sea throughout the realm. To whom the wreck belongeth.

The cause whereof originally wreck was given to the crown, stood upon two main maxims of the common law.

1st. That the property of all goods whatsoever must be in some person. 2ndly. That such goods as no subject can claim any property in, do belong to the king by his prerogative. 2 Inst. 167.

The taking of goods whereof no one had a property at the time is not felony; and, therefore, he who takes away a wreck before it is seized by the person who has a right thereto, is not guilty of felony, and shall only be punished by fine or the like. 1 Haw. c. 33, s. 24. That is to say, he is not guilty of felony by the common law; but it is otherwise by the statutes following. Seizing wreck not felony at common law.

To preserve ships stranded or in distress from being plundered by the country people, it is enacted, by the 12 Anne, st. 2, c. 18, and the 26 Geo. II. c. 19, as follows (which act of the 12 Anne is required to be read in the church four times a year, in all sea-port towns, and on the coast): Assisting ships in distress.

Allowance for attendance.

and constables above-mentioned, or any of them, are hereby empowered and required to demand of the superior officers of such ship or vessel so riding at anchor, as aforesaid, assistance by their boats, and such hands as they can conveniently spare, for the said service and preservation of the said ship or vessel so in distress, as aforesaid; and that, in case such superior officer of such ship or vessel riding at anchor, as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect to give such assistance, he shall forfeit for the same the sum of 100*l*., to be recovered by the superior officer of the said ship or vessel so in distress, as aforesaid, together with their costs of suit, in any of her majesty's courts of record, by action, debt, bill, plaint, or information, wherein no essoin, wager of law, or protection, shall be allowed."

By the 26 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 6, it is enacted, "that for the better ascertaining the salvage to be paid in pursuance of this present act, and the act before mentioned, and for the more effectual putting the same acts in execution, the justice of the peace, mayor, bailiff, collector of the customs, or chief constable, who shall be nearest to the place where any ship, goods, or effects shall be stranded or cast away, shall forthwith give public notice for a meeting, to be held as soon as possible, of the sheriff or his deputy, the justices of the peace, mayors, or other chief magistrates of towns corporate, coroners, and commissioners of the land-tax, or any five or more of them, who are hereby required and empowered to give aid in the execution of this and the said former act, and to employ proper persons for the saving of ships in distress, and such ships, vessels, and effects, as shall be stranded or cast away; and also to examine persons, upon oath, touching or concerning the same, or the salvage thereof, and to adjust the quantum of such salvage, and distribute the same among the persons concerned in such salvage, in case of disagreement among the parties, or the said persons; and that every such sheriff, justice of the peace, mayor, chief magistrate, coroner, lord of a manor, under-sheriff, or commissioner of the land-tax, attending and acting at such meeting, shall be paid 4*s*. a-day for his expenses in such attendance, out of the goods and effects saved by their care or direction."

Section 9. And also the deputy-sheriff and the officers of excise shall be proper officers to put these acts in execution.

And by sect. 10, within the cinque-ports, the lord warden of the cinque-ports, the lieutenant of Dover Castle, the deputy-warden of the cinque-ports, the judge official, and commissary of the court of admiralty of the cinque-ports, shall put the same in execution there.

Section 12. "That it shall be lawful for any one or more of his majesty's justices of the peace, in case of need, and in the absence of the high sheriff, to take sufficient power of the county, to repress all unjust violence, and duly to enforce the execution of this act."

the reign of King Henry the Eighth, intituled 'For Pirates,' it is among other things enacted to the effect following, that whenever any commission for the punishment of certain offences therein named, shall be directed or sent to any place within the jurisdiction of the five ports, that then every such commission shall be directed unto the lord warden of the said port for the time being, or to his deputy, or unto three or four such persons as the lord chancellor for the time being shall name and appoint; and whereas by the said act it is farther enacted to the effect following, that every inquisition and trial to be had by virtue of such commission shall be made and had by the inhabitants of the said five ports, or the members of the same; and whereas of a long time past no such commission has been sent to any place within the jurisdiction of the Cinque-Ports: be it enacted, for the more certain and speedy administration of justice, that as often as his majesty shall direct a commission, according to the provisions of the aforesaid act, to the admiral or admirals, or his or their lieutenant deputy and deputies, it shall and may be lawful for his majesty, on the application of the lord warden of the Cinque-Ports, to direct such commission jointly to the admiral or admirals, or his or their lieutenant deputy and deputies, and also to the lord warden of the Cinque-Ports for the time being, and to his deputy; and the commissioners who shall sit by virtue of such commission, so jointly addressed, to whatever shire or place in the realm the same shall be limited, shall have full power and authority to inquire into, try, and determine all offences named in the said act, or in any other act relating to proceedings under such commission, by the oaths of twelve good and lawful inhabitants in the shire limited in the said commission, whether the said offences shall have been committed within the jurisdictions of the lord admiral of England, or of the lord warden of the Cinque-Ports; and all and every trial, conviction, judgment, and proceeding whatsoever under such commission, shall be as good and effectual to all intents and purposes in law, and shall be followed by the same consequences to the offender or offenders, as if the same were had by virtue of any separate commission to be issued under the provisions of the aforesaid act of King Henry the Eighth: provided always, and it is hereby further declared, that this act, or anything herein contained, shall not extend, or be construed to extend, to the taking away, abridging, prejudicing, or impeaching, in any manner whatever, the jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty of England, or the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court of the Cinque-Ports, two ancient towns and their members; but that it shall and may be lawful for the said courts respectively, and the judge or judges thereof for the time being, to have, use, exercise, and enjoy jurisdiction over all such matters, rights, and offences, as they have heretofore had, used, exercised, and enjoyed, as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes whatever, as if this act had not been made; anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding." See also the 48 Geo. III. c. 130, ss. 17, 18.

Sect. 17. "Provided, that this act, or anything herein contained, shall not extend or be construed to extend to the taking away, abridging, hindering, prejudicing, or impeaching of any grant, liberties, franchises, and privileges heretofore granted to and vested in the corporation of the Trinity House of Deptford Strond; but that the said corporation shall hold and enjoy the same as fully and effectually, to all intents and purposes, as they might have done in case this act had never been made; anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding." distance along the eastern side of the Galloper Sand, until the north end thereof bears west north west, true bearing, from the west north west bearing of the Galloper, it runs in a direct line across the shoal called the Thwart Middle, till it reaches the shore underneath the Maze Tower; from thence following in a line of the shore up to Saint Orsyth, in the county of Essex, and following the course of the shore up to the river Coln, to the landing-place nearest Brightlingsea; from thence in a direct line to Shoe Bacon; from thence to the point of Shellness, on the Isle of Shippey; and from thence across the waters to Feversham; and from thence following the line of coast round the North and South Forelands, and Beachy Head, till it reaches the said Red Cliff, including all the waters, creeks, and havens, comprehended between them: provided always, and it is hereby declared, that nothing in this act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to enlarge or abridge the local limits of the ancient jurisdiction, rights, and privileges of the lord high admiral of England or the lord warden or admiral of the Cinque-Ports respectively, or their respective representatives; but that the same shall remain according to ancient usage, and that the description hereinbefore contained shall only be deemed applicable to the purposes of this act; anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding." Sect. 20. "That in all cases it shall be lawful for the owner or owners, or if the owner or owners refuse, for the salvors, to sell so much of the property saved as will be sufficient to defray the salvage adjudged, and all expenses attending the same, and such other reasonable charges and expenses respecting the said property, as shall be allowed by the High Court of Admiralty, or by the Court of Admiralty of the Cinque-Ports, or by the commissioners appointed under this act; and that, on the production of an order or decree from the High Court of Admiralty, or from the Court of Admiralty of the Cinque-Ports, or of an award made by the commissioners appointed under this act, the commissioners of customs and excise shall be empowered and required, and they are hereby empowered and required, to allow the sale of such goods as aforesaid, free from the payment of all duties: provided nevertheless, that in all cases in which they may think it advisable, it shall be lawful for the commissioners of the customs and excise to refer any such award which may be produced to them from the commissioners appointed under this act, to the judgment or revision of the High Court of Admiralty." The part of this section, however, as to the sale of goods duty free, to pay the expenses of salvage, &c., is repealed by the 6 Geo. IV. c. 105.

Sect. 21. "Provided, that nothing herein in this behalf contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to affect or impeach the jurisdiction to be exercised within the Cinque-Ports, or to affect or abridge in any degree the jurisdiction or authority of the High Court of Admiralty."

By the 53 Geo. III. c. 87, the 48 Geo. III. c. 130, and 49 Geo. III. c. 122, except so far as the same are altered by this act, shall continue in force for seven years from the passing of this act, and from thence to the end of the then next session of Parliament, and no longer. And see, as to the further continuance and present force of this act, the 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 75, s. 1, ante, 1046.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 18, it is enacted, "that if any person shall plunder or steal any part of any ship or vessel which shall be in distress, or wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, or any goods, merchandize, or articles of any kind belonging to such ship or vessel, every such offender, being convicted thereof, shall suffer death as a felon: provided always, that when articles of small value shall be stranded or cast on shore, and shall be stolen without circumstances of cruelty, outrage, or violence, it shall be lawful to prosecute and punish the offender as for simple larceny; and in either case the offender may be indicted and tried either in the county in which the offence shall have been committed, or in any county next adjoining."

Plundering any part of the tackle or cargo of a shipwrecked vessel.

Proviso.

See the general clauses of this act, title Larceny, Vol. III. p. 550.

Mr. Carrington observes, "It may be considered that the terms 'small value' are very indefinite, in so penal an enactment; but those words were taken from the latter of the two statutes above mentioned. However, it was there enacted, that persons who took articles of small value, &c. should be triable for petty larceny; which appears to have there limited the terms 'small value' to a value under twelve pence." Car. C. L. 299.

The prior statutes relative to this offence are repealed by the 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27.

The 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 19, also enacts, "that if any goods, merchandize, or articles of any kind, belonging to any ship or vessel in distress, or wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, as aforesaid, shall, by virtue of a search-warrant, to be granted as hereinafter mentioned, be found in the possession of any person, or on the premises of any person with his knowledge, and such person, being carried before a justice of the peace, shall not satisfy the justice that he came lawfully by the same, then the same shall, by order of the justice, be forthwith delivered over to or for the use of the rightful owner thereof; and the offender, on conviction of such offence before the justice, shall forfeit and pay, over and above the value of the goods, merchandize, or articles, such sum of money, not exceeding 20*l.*, as to the justice shall seem meet."

Persons in possession of shipwrecked goods, not giving a satisfactory account.

By sect. 20, it is enacted, "that if any person shall offer or expose for sale any goods, merchandize, or articles whatsoever, which shall have been unlawfully taken, or reasonably suspected so to have been, from any ship or vessel in distress, or wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, as aforesaid, in every such case any person to whom the same shall be offered for sale, or any officer of the customs or excise, or peace-officer, may lawfully seize the same, and shall, with all convenient speed, carry the same, or give notice of such seizure, to some justice of the peace; and if the person who shall have offered or exposed the same for sale, being duly summoned by such justice, shall not appear and satisfy the justice that he came lawfully by such goods, merchandize, or articles, then the same shall, by order of the justice, be forthwith delivered over to or for the use of the rightful owner thereof, upon payment of a reasonable reward (to be ascertained by the justice) to the person who seized the same; and the CONCLUSION.

HAVING thus finished the work proposed, it may be requisite, upon the whole, to subjoin one single reflection, which will occur to every reader in perusing almost every one of the larger titles of this book; and that is, concerning the possibility and expediency of reforming the statute law. The statutes at large, from the very nature of the thing, have, in process of time, become very cumbersome and very intricate. They are not to be purchased but for a larger sum of money, nor to be understood without a greater expense of time, than a wise man would often choose to employ in that way.

The course to be taken in that matter seems to be this: (a)

First, Actually to repeal all those statutes, and parts of statutes, which are virtually repealed by subsequent contradictory statutes.

Secondly, To repeal all those statutes which are obsolete, and grown out of use, by the alteration of times and circumstances.

Thirdly, To repeal all those statutes which, being neither contradicted by subsequent statutes, nor become obsolete, yet are rendered useless by subsequent statutes enacting the same things over again, with alterations and amendments.

Fourthly, To repeal or alter all those statutes which are frivolous,—that is, which possibly cannot, or probably never will, be executed: such as those which appoint an offender to be whipped by the hands of the common hangman, where perhaps there is no such officer; or which prohibit an offence under a very small penalty, to be recovered in the courts at Westminster, where the reward will not countervail the expense of recovering it.

(a) These suggestions are by Dr. Burn.

Fifthly, To omit all those statutes which, although enacted to be public statutes, yet are only of private concern: such as those for bridges in particular places, or paving the streets in such a market town; and the like.

Sixthly, As to the rest, to lay all the statutes and clauses of statutes together which relate to the same subject, and out of the whole to compose one, two, or more uniform and consistent statutes; and then to repeal all those other, as workmen destroy the scaffolding when they have erected the building.

I know but of one material objection against this method of proceeding: and that is, that the law being now for the most part well settled upon the statutes, notwithstanding their acknowledged disorder and confusion, this would tend to unsettle all again, by breaking the connection which there is between one statute and another, and one part of a statute and another, altering the words and phrases, and after all, perhaps, not much mending the matter, since it is possible that the new statutes may be as liable to objections as the former were.

But this is an argument not so much against the thing itself, as against the manner in which it may be executed. As to breaking the connexion, it is certain that for the most part there is no connexion; and where there is, that may easily be preserved. And it ought to be laid down as an invariable rule, to retain as much as possible the identical words and sentences of the former statutes; only rejecting what is superfluous, inserting the clear law as it now stands, and putting the same into a form more regular, concise, and easy. And this seemeth no way impossible to be done by any person of a tolerable understanding, endowed with a clear head and much patience.
